*"It has made us very, very happy," said the King. "Thank you so much for all you have done. It was a splendid sight." * * * * "I never saw anything like Portage Avenue before in my life," said the Queen. Two outstanding tributes to Edmonton enterprise on the occasion of the Royal Visit.*

ROYAL SWEETHEARTS WIN EDMONTON

Hail Edmonton - - and - - Farewell

Queen Elizabeth pauses to acknowledge the cheers which greeted the Royal couple as they stepped out of the legislative buildings at Edmonton Friday afternoon to continue their tour of the city. The King, resplendent in the uniform of a Marshal of the Royal Air Force, marches down the steps toward his car—every inch a king. While on the extreme right, behind His Majesty, can be seen Prime Minister Mackenzie King, hat in hand.

Monarchs Ride Into Hearts of Loyal Subjects

They Came, They Saw, They Conquered!

Under a typically Sunny Alberta sky of cobalt blue, flecked with fleecy clouds, through which poured flaming rays of sunshine, tempered by a mild western breeze which served to ripple the billowing folds of red, white and blue bunting, and to flutter the thousands of flags which flew from office windows, from the tops of downtown business blocks, from residences and from every point in the city to which a flag could be attached, King George VI. and his Royal Consort, the radiant Queen Elizabeth, rode into the hearts of the people of Edmonton and Northern and Central Alberta on Friday.

And it was no grudging capitulation. Men, women and children succumbed to the charm of the Royal sweethearts. From the time the King, tall and trim in the uniform of a Marshal of the Royal Air Force, stepped from the blue and silver Royal train and turned to help his smiling Queen down the steps to the station platform, the conquest was complete.

Smiling, the King turned to the Queen as the train rolled to a smooth stop and the Guard of Honor of the Edmonton Fusiliers crashed into the Present Arms, while the band played "God Save the King". The roar of guns as the first shot of the Royal Salute boomed out over the city drowned out his words, but Queen Elizabeth heard them, and gave an answering smile. It was at that moment that the King and Queen came into their own as far as Edmonton was concerned.

From far down the station platform came a shrill treble of childish cheering, and then as the crowd which thronged every immediate vantage point caught sight of the Royal couple, the cheering was doubled and redoubled, as old and young vied in paying loving homage to their sovereigns. Outside the station the tens of thousands which crowded the streets in that vicinity caught the contagion, and as the King and Queen stepped into view and the massed colors of the Canadian Legion were dipped in salute, roar after roar of cheering broke out, echoing and re-echoing down the crowded streets until it became a dull roar in the distance, softened but never stilled.

From the time the King and Queen stepped down to the platform to be greeted by Lieut. Governor J. C. Bowen and Mrs. Bowen, Premier William Aberhart and Mrs. Aberhart, Hon. James A. MacKinnon and Mrs. MacKinnon and Mayor J. W. Fry and Mrs. Fry, until after a triumphant tour of the city they returned to the Royal train more than three hours later the cheering never ceased.

True it died down as the Royal procession passed and faded into the distance, but ahead new crowds took up the welcoming paean, and it was through scenes of tumultuous enthusiasm and to the accompaniment of continuing cheers that they made their way through Edmonton's banner bedecked streets.

Their Majesties Thrilled by Edmonton's Rousing Welcome and Sight of Colorful Portage Avenue

By SAM G. ROSS

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Thrilled by the northwest's rousing welcome and the sight of Portage Avenue with its crowded bleachers, King George and Queen Elizabeth today were en route to Saskatoon in the blue and silver royal train.

Their Majesties were kept busy from the time they alighted from the train to start the 12-mile royal procession through the city until they left at night after driving from the government dinner to the station through crowd-packed streets.

It was the historic scene on Portage Avenue—2¼ mile stretch of pavement without a building on either side — with bleachers, accommodating 68,000 persons, packed with men, women and children on either side that brought the Queen's last comment before boarding the train.

"I never saw anythnig like Portage Avenue before in my life," said the Queen to Mrs. P. W. Abbott, wife of the chairman of the Royal Visit committee. "Are you responsible for Portage Avenue decorations?" she asked Mr. Abbott. He smiled modestly and answered "possibly yes."

"It has made us very very happy," said the King. "Thank you very much for all you have done. It was a splendid sight."

Edmonton, farthest northwest city to be visited on the tour, and seat of Alberta's Social Credit government, went wild with excitement throughout the day.

From the time Premier Aberhart extended the province's greetings until he waved farewell the day was spirited, active and loud in expression of loyalty.

Three times during the day police had to move quickly to control the over-enthusiastic crowds. First it was at the Indian encampment on Portage Avenue; then again at the legislative buildings and finally at night when Their Majesties were leaving the

QUEBEC MOVIE HOUSES CLOSE INDEFINITELY

Screens Of 11 Theatres Are Blank Over Tax Row

QUEBEC, June 3—The walls and narrow streets of this picturesque capital of French-Canada held a new interest for the 135,000 residents today because all the moving picture theatres were "closed indefinitely" and people had to seek some other form of diversion.

Screens in Quebec's 11 theatres no longer were trails to the world of make-believe as operators, balking at a boost in the city's amusement tax from 10 to 20 per cent, closed their theatres after last night's final show.

When the tax, designed to help balance the city's budget, took effect May 1, the operators protested and boosted their prices as much as nine cents a ticket. The result was decreased patronage and lower receipts.

Operators protested the increased tax would force them out of business. Not until yesterday, however, did they inform patrons of the projected "black out."

Rescue Hope Given Up For 98 of Thetis Crew Lying On Ocean Bed

LONDON, June 3.—The admiralty officially abandoned hope for the 97 men aboard the submarine Thetis at 4:30 p.m. (8:30 a.m., M.S.T.) today. Marking the world's greatest undersea disaster, an official of Cammell Laird announced shortly after 3 p.m. (7 a.m., M.S.T.): "We have now no hope of saving further lives. We consider that the men died from chlorine gas. The ship carried a large quantity of chlorine which we think would have escaped owing to the angle at which she laid."

By GUY RHOADES

Canadian Press Staff Writer.

BIRKENHEAD, England, June 3—Ninety-eight men, trapped in a new British submarine under 130 feet of water, were given up for dead today. First the submarine's builders and then the Admiralty issued statements saying hope had been abandoned for the men entombed in the vessel Thetis.

The offices of Cammell Laird, ship builders, considered the men probably died from chlorine gas emanating from Thetis' battery room. The Admiralty statement said merely: "There is now no longer justification for hope that any further lives can be saved from the Thetis. Salvage work proceeds."

The number aboard was raised from 90 to 98 during the day with disclosure by the Admiralty that eight additional civilian technicians not previously listed were among those on the test run.

Only four of the 102 men aboard the vessel when it dived into the mud at the bottom of the Irish sea Thursday escaped yesterday with the aid of Davis "lung". Three of the 98 remaining were believed to have died trying to escape in the same way, a method made perilous by the 45 degrees angle at which the submarine rested.

There was no immediate explanation for the disaster, the worst in submarine history. The four who

WAR VETERANS AT CENOTAPH FOR ROYALTY

His Majesty Sends Wreath To Be Placed On Memorial

Thousands of Great War veterans lined up at the cenotaph hoping that His Majesty would pause in the Royal Progress and lay a wreath on the cenotaph.

The Royal car swept off 100 avenue to the memorial site while the King was acknowledging acclaim from the throng lining the south side of the street and did not see the soldier party with the wreath until his car was practically abreast of it. It was then too late to halt the Royal car.

Later the King sent an equerry to place the wreath on the cenotaph in his name. Announcement of this gracious act was made by Col. P. E. Debney at the Canadian Legion banquet. Col. Debney accompanied the equerry during the wreath placing ceremony.

No scheduled stop at the cenotaph was on the official program and when the King did not stop the wreath was placed on the cenotaph by Charles Daws, veteran bugler.

Their Majesties Walk Block to See Patients At University Hospital

Pain left little twisted bodies and joy reigned in eyes that have been dulled with illness as Their Majesties walked a full city block greeting tiny patients and war-torn veterans at the

Throwing schedules and ceremonial to the winds, Their Majesties brought cheering words to the sufferers whose cots lined the greens of the hospital grounds, while the thousands who had thronged the route at this point closed in and followed the King and Queen as they spoke to the children.

The scene was one of the most touching in the long list of touching scenes enacted during the Royal tour and many of the spectators wept unashamedly as they witnessed the graciousness of Their Majesties and the delight their sympathetic greetings brought to the sufferers.

CHEER LUSTILY

The scene at the hospital grounds was a gala one, as the bathrobe-clad wounded war veterans and infantile paralysis stricken children on white-sheeted cots, attended by nurses and spotless internes waved their flags and cheered lustily.

Since noon Friday patients had been removed gradually from the hospital to the outside grounds so they could take part in the capital's magnificent welcome.

The King and Queen were received at the Hospital grounds by Col. Dr. R. T. Washburn, superintendent of the hospital, and Miss H. S. Peters, superintendent of nurses, who conducted them first to the cots on which the war veterans were lying.

First to be greeted by the King and Queen was Sam Allen, 31st Battalion. The Queen asked him how long he had been in hospital, and wished him a speedy recovery from his illness. Next she greeted Alexander McCowan, 50th Battalion, then Wilfred Graham, 29th Battalion, and R. E. Browne, 10th Battalion. She showed concern for the war veterans, remarking to Mr. McCowan that he should have some protection for his head from the sun.

QUEEN CONVERSES

The Queen chatted to Mr. Browne for several minutes, enquiring after his length of stay in the hospital and the nature of his wounds. The veteran cheerfully assured her that his was only a temporary relapse and that he would be out of hospital soon. She wished him speedy recovery, flashing her charming smile on him as she passed to the next cot.

Completing the tour of the veterans' cots the King and Queen moved off to the hospital grounds entrance where the Queen was presented with a bouquet of lilies of the valley by Joanne Galbraith, an infantile paralysis patient.

The party was scheduled to return to the Royal car following the tour of the veterans' cots, but Her Majesty catching sight of the children lining the grounds in their cots moved in their direction and walked the length of the block bringing cheering words to the little sufferers as she passed.

IS INTERESTED

His Majesty greeted the children as he passed, and chatted with Miss Peters asking the number of children in the hospital. He was deeply interested in the work of the hospital, Miss Peters stated, asking questions about the nursing staff strength and the training of nurses in the hospital.

The King expressed the opinion that with this wonderful climate there should not be much sickness amongst children, Miss Peters stated after the party had continued the royal progress.

Submarine

managed to escape were suffering from shock.

Seven salvage men who helped raise the German battle fleet scuttled at Scapa Flow were among those descending in the early morning. Flown here from the Orkneys, they are regarded as among the best divers.

The navy already has in service one of the same class of submarines as the Thetis. Two more are about to undergo tests.

CIVILIANS LOST TOO

A large group of civilian technicians and the commander of the flotilla—Captain H. P. H. Oram, who was one of the four to escape by the lung apparatus to help direct rescue operations — were aboard the submarine on her trial run, as is customary.

It is regular practice for officers and men of a submarine to be attached to her for several months before she is accepted from the builders by the Admiralty. A full crew is required for adequate tests and it is not practicable for the builders to finish trials alone before delivery.

CULMINATING DRIVE

The Thetis put out Thursday with a single tug to carry out trials which called for a series of short dives leading up to the culminating three-hour dive, on which she disappeared.

It was a cheerful, expert company aboard with two civilian caterers to see ample provisions. There were the pilot who brought the ship down the river, employees of the building firm and three representatives of armament concerns.

It is now established that sufficient Davis escape lungs were aboard to equip each civilian as well as the seamen.

It was a Royal Air Force plane which found the Thetis marker buoy, released from inside to show position. But there was no hint of why use could not be made of the telephone which the buoy contains.

STERN STICKING OUT

The destroyer Brazen was the first surface craft on the scene, and she found some 18 feet of the stern sticking out of the water at a sharp angle. Apparently half of the submarine's length was sunk in the mud, nose down.

Almost as the Brazen came alongside, two of the survivors came up with their "lungs". This apparently was a coincidence. More than two hours later, the last pair of the four who escaped with the lung apparatus appeared.

The decision for Captain Oram to come to the surface was regarded as logical, because he had special qualifications to assist in salvage operations, having survived one other disaster and having since become the squadron commander.

But another question mark entered here. It generally was understood that Captain Oram and the three other survivors said their companions intended to attempt to follow immediately. Apparently several did and lost their lives in the attempt. The Admiralty acknowledged "unconfirmed" information of at least two such cases.

EXPECTING MESSAGE

One of these cases was Stoker Wilfred Thomas Hole. His wife was expecting a message from him today—the first anniversary of their wedding. Instead, she received a telegram from the Admiralty. It said her husband was "believed to have died while endeavoring to escape from the submarine," and added that "this will be confirmed when definite news is received."

Every escape by the Davis lung lets a quantity of water into the submarine and cuts down the air supply. Many wondered: did the escape of a fraction of the vessel's complement threaten to plunge the Thetis deeper into the mud, submerge the stern which then was visible and impair chances of raising the craft? Did the commander aboard so decide and order lung attempts to cease? or did some further mishap occur?

BLOCKED LONE EXIT

Without any announced circumstances to support it, some experts reasoned that those below decided to pair one civilian and one seaman in escape attempts and that a civilian, less familiar with the escape hatch, was caught in it—blocking the lone available exit.

It was recognized on all sides that at least the extreme forepart of the boat was flooded at the outset of the accident.

The admiralty said all were alive when the four survivors began leaving, and it was reasonable to suppose that the crew had succeeded, therefore, in evacuating the fore compartments—closing a water-tight bulkhead and leaving only water there rather than a part of the crew as was the case in the Squalus tragedy in the United States last month.

What caused the forepart of the boat to be flooded in the first place? Was it flooding of the forward torpedo tubes opened by some misadventure with the valves, or did the vessel open a hole by striking some submerged object?

FOR SEVEN HOURS

The tail of the 265 foot submarine was above water about seven hours Friday. Immediate hope, with a part of the ship above the surface, seemed to lie in cutting a hole in the hull and getting those aboard through it.

Experts explained, however, that the stern was not high enough for that, since the part above the sea was not accessible to those inside. It therefore was thought best to lift the stern still more and to have some support for it before starting cutting operations with the acetylene cutting plant.

TIDE TOO STRONG

A tug with the cutting apparatus was brought to the scene yesterday. But when it arrived near mid-afternoon, the strength of the tide had swept the submarine's stern under water again. When the evening tide occurred at 6 p.m. the stern was not visible. Divers tried and failed to connect a hose to the hull to pump fresh air and expel poisonous gases.

YOUNGEST PILOT HONORED BY KING AT STATION HERE

The King, who arrived in Edmonton wearing his uniform of Marshal of the Royal Air Force, was keenly interested in the accomplishment of 15-year-old Thornton Tweed, Edmonton's youngest pilot, and chatted with him at the C.N.R. station.

Thornton, who is the son of Charles Tweed, veteran transport pilot of Edmonton, made his first solo flight at the age of eleven. He was at the station with the Edmonton Fusiliers guard of honor, for which he is bugler, and was introduced to His Majesty by Capt. H. J. Towerton.

The King asked the boy how long he had trained and Thornton replied that he had spent two or three months taking instruction before making his first solo.

"He asked me when and where I had flown and I told him I made my first solo flight on September 28, 1935 at Lethbridge," Thornton said afterward. "The King congratulated me and said that was very good. I think the King is really a fine fellow. He was certainly very nice to me."

Premier Presents Address

—By Bulletin Staff Photographer.

Two Premiers Accord Edmonton Great Tribute

Proud Day for Veteran As He Meets Royalty: So Excited He Forgets

Veteran of army service in Egypt and veteran of the Great War, James MacGregor, 74, pioneer Westlock district farmer, has experienced many thrills during his lifetime, but the greatest thrill of all came Friday afternoon on the steps of the Legislative Buildings, when his Sovereign King George VI and Queen Elizabeth chatted with him and then shook him by the hand.

Mr. MacGregor, who originally came to Alberta in 1906 from Perthshire section of Scotland, served in the famous Scots Guards, of which His Majesty is Colonel. He had served 18 years on guard duty at Buckingham Palace and garrison duty at the Tower of London. This was during the reign of the King's great grandmother, Queen Victoria, from 1883 to 1891.

A short time ago Mr. MacGregor received a letter from the King's private secretary requesting that the old Imperial veteran be in Edmonton so that Their Majesties might have a few words with him. And the old Scot from Perthshire was right in the front row as Their Majesties came down the steps of the legislative buildings to enter their car. With his medals proudly displayed on his breast, the bronzed Alberta farmer, was thrilled beyond words when Their Majesties walked over to him and shook him by the hand.

CAN'T REMEMBER

"I was so excited I don't remember what they said to me," he admitted after the King and Queen had left to continue their tour of the city.

"His Majesty is a bra' lad and the Queen, God Bless her, is the fairest lassie in all the land," Mr. MacGregor enthusiastically told reporters.

Mr. MacGregor won the Distinguished Conduct Medal during the South African War. He also has the Queen Victoria service medal (South Africa), the King Edward service medal (South Africa), the Egyptian medal and the Khedive's star; and the medal of the Royal Society for life saving.

FIRE RESCUE

The Scottish veteran was awarded his life saving medal when the married men's quarters at Wellington Barracks burned down in 1890. Along with several others Mr. MacGregor succeeded in rescuing about 30 families from the burning building.

At the outbreak of the Great War Mr. MacGregor enlisted with the 192nd Battalion, recruited in the Crow's Nest Pass. He did not see active service but acted as a special instructor at Bramshott in England

NOTED BRITON, SIR P. SASSOON, DIES IN LONDON

One Of Richest Members Of House Of Commons Passes

LONDON, June 3—Sir Philip Sassoon, first commissioner of works since 1937 and one of the richest members of the house of commons, died today at the age of 50.

Sir Philip had been ill for about a month. He was the third baronet and succeeded his father in 1912. In the same year he was elected to parliament as a Conservative for Hythe and his death creates a vacancy in the house.

His father, Sir Edward Sassoon, also sat as Conservative M.P. for Hythe from 1899 to 1912 and between them they represented the division for an unbroken period of 40 years.

His mother was a daughter of Baron Gustave De Rochschild.

When Sir Philip entered parliament he was 23 and the youngest man in the house. He gave parties for royalty and was said to be the foremost Jew in English society. He coupled with his parliamentary career a lively and active interest in both art and flying.

VISITED OTTAWA

Sir Philip visited Ottawa in the autumn of 1938, flying United States army transport plane, and had a close escape from injury while landing. As he stepped aground at Uplands field he almost backed into the swinging propeller of the big tri-motor plane. A member of the welcoming group pulled him away by the coat lapel.

During the war he was private secretary to Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, commander-in-chief of the British armies in France. Following the armistice he became parliamentary private secretary to the minister of transport from 1919 to 1920 and then, until 1922, to Prime Minister David Lloyd George.

FAMILY FORTUNE

He occupied the post of under-secretary for air in the Baldwin government from 1931 to 1937, when he was named first commissioner of works, one of the senior government posts not carrying a seat in the cabinet.

The family fortune was founded by Sir Philip's great-grandfather, David Sassoon, who was born in Baghdad and emigrated to Bombay. His eldest son, the first baronet, became head of the firm of David Sassoon and Sons, merchants and bankers, of London and Bombay.

ness of the occasion, perhaps, but not in the least subdued or embarrassed, the abandoned and enthusiastic cheers rose from the very depths of their heaving breasts.

FILLED BEFORE TIME

Special sections of bleacher seats reserved on both the North and South sides of the city were filled by Edmonton and visiting children long before the appointed time of Their Majesties' appearance.

Entertainment for the children, while they waited for the first excited shouts that signalled the approach of the Royal procession, took the form of community singing and special entertainment provided by officials in charge.

The long wait in certain sections of the city may have made the young subjects slightly impatient. But few of them complained. A view of their rulers was worth ages of waiting to them. They truly showed the intensely loyal character of the rising generation.

Many of the youngsters boasted of having seen the King and Queen, not just once, but two, three and even as many as seven times.

While many children from outside points arrived earlier in the week, the greatest influx began just after the first streaks of dawn appeared to start the greatest day in the lives of most of the youngsters. The stream of young life continued to pour in by train, car, bus and every other means of conveyance. Some living closer to the city arrived on foot. Up until just a few minutes before the arrival of the Royal cortege the stream continued.

GET UNION JACKS

All children were supplied with small replicas of the Union Jack together with song sheets bearing the words of such old and revered numbers as "Pack Up our Troubles in our Old Kit Bag," "Roamin' in the Gloamin'," "East Side, West Side," as well as the anthems "God Save the King," "O Canada" and "Land of Hope and Glory."

King Edward public and high school on the South Side, the point where the procession turned back on the journey to the North Side, was the scene of one of the most tumultous welcomes offered by the school children. Here were gathered close to 1,100 pupils from King Edward, Rutherford, Ritchie, King Edward Park, Walterdale and Bennett—all South Side schools.

Bleachers here were erected on the east and west sides of the 26-year-old building, one of the most beautiful in the city. Principals of the six schools were in charge of the huge throng and all pronounced their charges orderly and well-behaved during the time when they first began to collect and take their seats shortly after four o'clock until the Royal procession passed from view just after six.

MASSED SINGING

Massed singing around the two-storey brick structure was under the leadership of J. N. Eagleson, supervisor of music for the Edmonton public schools. He pronounced the singing of the scholars as excellent.

The school was fittingly bedecked for the occasion, presenting a grand appearance with flags and bunting waving from the windows and the huge doorway. A new flag, specially purchased for the visit was billowing out from the mast on top of the school. Colorful beds of red geraniums, planted in anticipation of the coming of Their Majesties were blooming in profusion.

The King, himself was seen to scan the facade of the building from top to bottom and then from one end to the other, his brow puckering with the close scrutiny. The car didn't stop but the King saw all as his car rolled by, and he seemed to nod in approval.

It was a big moment for the school's principal, G. Marion, when he noted the King's survey of the building.

When the long wait was over and the procession neared, waves of spontaneous cheering rolled from one end of the bleachers and then moved in rising crescendo to the other extremity of the stands.

CHAT ANIMATEDLY

Boys and girls surrounding the King Edward school had little difficulty in finding things to do to entertain themselves. Singing took up a good deal of their time, but when they became a little weary of that they chatted animatedly among themselves and speculated on the scene that would soon meet their eyes.

They were all agog with the thrill that would soon be theirs—a thrill that they will carry with them for the remainder of their lives. And they weren't disappointed when that thrilling moment arrived.

Gasps of "Isn't she beautiful?" and "Isn't he handsome" broke in hushed voices from both girls and boys alike when the royal car bearing Their Majesties glided by.

Gasps and hushed tones were immediately succeeded by cheering and then "God Save the King."

The King and Queen passed and awed voices were heard to exclaim, "Gee! Wasn't it swell!" and others to mourn, "Heck! It was over so quick!"

A note of humor was injected into the afternoon's activities at the school as the children decided to collect autographs. They swept down in a body on school teachers, photographers, policemen and newspapermen. They waved flags under the faces of those hearties and insisted that the small banners be signed.

Some of the flags bore so many signatures that the designs were barely distinguishible. But the kids really got a kick out of it.

One harassed newsman was heard to exclaim, "What price fame?" He liked it, though, as he obligingly signed flags until he very nearly contracted writer's cramp.

Asked if they were going to try to get the signatures of the King and Queen, they replied that "they'd sure like to."

All in all, it was a grand day for the kiddies and the thousands who viewed Their Majesties were all of one accord that it was the greatest day of their lives.

gram that it went forward without a hitch. The inspection of the Guard of Honor, the drive through the flag-bedecked streets, the never-to-be-forgotten parade down Portage avenue, newly christened Kingsway, with its tier upon tier of cheering thousands, four miles of living loyalty; the triumphant parade down 101st street to Jasper avenue, and then down Ninth street to the Parliament buildings, with the brass-helmeted, white plumed escort of the 19th Alberta Dragoons making an unforgettable sight; the presentation of Alberta's V.C.'s on the legislature steps and the ceremony inside the legislative chamber where ministers and members, and aldermen of the city of Edmonton, and their wives, were presented to Their Majesties, all went forward with clock-like precision.

And all the time the cheering continued. Even the sight of the motorcycle escort of Royal Canadian Mounted Policemen or of the Naval detachments, trim and neat in the service uniform of the senfor service, with white cap covers setting off the deep blue of their uniforms, or the Calgary Scottish, kilts and sporrans swinging in rhythm, the Legion of Frontiersmen in their distinctive khaki and blue, or the Edmonton infantry regiments and the dismounted units of the artillery and 19th Dragoons, evoked cheers from the crowd.

PRELUDE TO STORM

But all this was but a prelude to the storm that broke when the long maroon colored car of Their Majesties appeared, its Royal Standard fluttering in the breeze, and the smiling King and Queen acknowledging the loving homage of their Alberta subjects.

It was the same after the pause at the legislative buildings, a pause which was enriched by the sudden appearance of The King and Queen on the stone balcony over the main entrance, when in response to continued chants of "We Want The King—We Want The Queen", the Royal couple made an unscheduled appearance to be greeted again by salvo upon salvo of sustained cheering.

Entering their cars again after the legislative ceremony The King and Queen drove over the High Level bridge to the South Side, making another unscheduled stop at the University hospital where patients in the Soldiers' Wing had been wheeled out to see them pass by. Noting the long line of chairs and cots His Majesty leaned forward, spoke to the car driver and stopped the car. A few seconds later The King and Queen were down among the veterans, smiling and shaking hands with them, while an excited crowd milled round, cheering every move.

Another stop before the young patients from the infantile paralysis wards of the University hospital gave the crowd a second thrill, and as bright-eyed youngsters, tongue-tied with happiness, beamed on The King and Queen, the crowd kept up its roaring acclaim.

Along Whyte avenue, through South Side residential streets, back across the High Level bridge, and then along 109th, down 100th avenue, 101st street and back to the Canadian National depot, past serried ranks of war veterans, medals and decorations glinting in the sun, and vari-colored berets indicating the divisions of the Canadian Corps with which they served overseas, the King and Queen and their entourage swept.

Every foot of the way was a triumphant march.

DENSE CROWD

Back at the depot a dense crowd of several thousand cheered themselves hoarse again and yet again as the King and Queen alighted at the end of the processional route, and, although they were not scheduled to make their next appearance until nearly two hours' later, the crowd waited, its numbers augmented each minute as wave after wave of new arrivals pressed into every available vantage place, packing every approach, until an estimated twenty thousand persons were crammed into the space in front of the Canadian National depot.

Scenes of the wildest enthusiasm were witnessed as the King and Queen emerged two hours later for the drive to the Macdonald hotel for the official dinner, and the same scenes were repeated at the hotel on their arrival and departure and when they returned to the station to entrain for Saskatoon. For hours the huge crowd along 100 street had stood in line, and as the King and Queen stepped from their car for the last time, roar after roar of cheering broke out again and yet again, to be taken up by still more crowds in the rotunda and along every street approaching the station.

Spontaneous and unrehearsed, the welcome given by Edmonton to the Royal visitors took even the hardened correspondents who have accompanied the royal tour since its inception by surprise.

"We have never seen anything like it anywhere in Canada," said one New York correspondent. "Certainly there has never been another sight like Portage avenue, and at no place on the tour has such genuine and spontaneous enthusiasm been evoked. Edmonton has done itself proud."

Other correspondents expressed similar views and every story sent from Edmonton by the nearly one hundred newsmen and women on the tour told the same tale. Edmonton had set the seal on a Royal tour which was already going down in history as the most spectacular exhibition of loyalty yet witnessed in Canada at any time in the history of the Dominion.

And they were true stories. For twenty-four hours before the arrival of the Royal train crowds from the surrounding districts had been pouring into Edmonton. By bus, by private car, by trucks and by special trains they poured into the city.

Every train and bus was crowded to capacity. Every road converging on the city from north, east, south and west was jammed to capacity, and when the first gun of the 21-gun Royal salute boomed its message that The King and Queen had finally arrived, Edmonton's normal population of 89,000 had been increased to upwards of 200,000.

CITY'S GREATEST DAY

"The greatest day in the history of Edmonton," said His Worship Mayor Fry. "Never before have so many people been crowded into the city at one time. It is Edmonton's day of days."

And as the Royal train pulled out into the night, His Majesty the King, a slim figure in black and white, and The Queen a shimmering vision of silver, her diamond tiara flashing in the lights of the rear vestibule of the Royal train, skyrockets burst above them in a cascade of glittering multi-colored stars and the roar of cheering crowds followed them into the darkness. Edmonton was still voicing its full-throated approval of Canada's King and Queen.

They came, they saw; they conquered.

Child Patient Has Flowers for Her Queen

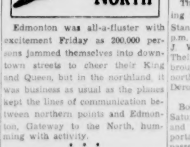
Shown immediately after their arrival in Edmonton Friday afternoon, members of the royal party are pictured here as they left the C.N.R. station. In front the King is walking with Mrs. Bowen, wife of Lieut.-Gov. J. C. Bowen. Following them, right to left, are Premier William Aberhart, Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King, Mrs. Aberhart, Mayor John W. Fry and Mrs. Fry.



Edmonton was all-a-fluster with excitement Friday as 200,000 persons jammed themselves into downtown streets to cheer their King and Queen, but in the northland it was business as usual as the planes kept the lines of communication between northern points and Edmonton, Gateway to the North, humming with activity.

King George VI may not have known it, but he gained a lot of prestige and admiration by his foresight and thoughtfulness in acknowledging Edmonton's claims to importance as an air centre by wearing the uniform of a Marshal of the Air Force.

• • •

Both the King and the Queen showed keen interest in the three planes which were on display at the airport end of Portage avenue, and saluted and smiled at the wartime pilots and observers who stood at attention beside them as Their Majesties passed.

• • •

The planes did their bit in swelling the crowds in the city Friday. Stan McMillan arrived in about 1 p.m. from Great Bear Lake with E. J. Walli, who managed to view Their Majesties. North Sawle brought in six passengers from north points, including Mr. and Mrs. Derosiers of Fort Norman.

• • •

Bob Randall was northbound on Saturday morning with R. Bertrand and Matt Berry, Northern Transportation executives, and other passengers and mail.

English Drought

LONDON, June 3—A large area of southeast England Friday began to experience what was officially recognized as an "absolute drought" as the country reached its 23rd successive rainless day.

40,000 Loyal Citizens Jam Downtown Streets: Call for Royal Couple

Wave on wave of cheers and cries of "We want the King! We want the Queen!" in a full-throated chorus from a crowd of more than 40,000 people, jammed in the space in front of the Macdonald hotel, extending down neighboring streets and as far north as the C.N.R. station, brought the Monarchs out for a brief appearance on the balcony Friday night to be hailed joyously.

Many of the multitude had stood, crammed in the small space for three to four hours and, when Their Majesties made a two-and-a-half minute appearance, they waved and cheered in a thundering hail to the youthful and handsome King and the beautiful Queen.

As Their Majesties walked into the hotel again, and the Alberta band on the balcony struck up, "God Save the King," the voices of the crowd swelled like a mighty choir, singing the National Anthem.

MASSED IN FRONT

People were filling the square as early as six o'clock to await the arrival of Their Majesties for the government dinner in the hotel. Before the Royal car arrived they were massed in front of the doorway.

A detachment of Mounted Police began at 7:30 o'clock to clear a lane for the autos but they found it impossible as the crowd was filled in for blocks back. An emergency call was put in for the Calgary Highlanders who were at dinner in the Masonic temple. The company of 225 kilties, under Lt.-Col. H. H. Riley, ran at the double more than three blocks to the hotel, where they linked arms and opened a lane for the cars of the Royal party.

Their Majesties arrived at eight o'clock, with the top up on the car. As it squeezed through the narrow opening in the crowd, the Queen leaned forward in her seat, an eager and delighted smile on her face as wild cheers greeted the Royal pair. The King sat upright and smiled slightly.

The car brushed close to a crowd of little girls whose beaming, excited faces were framed in the car windows, so close that they might easily have kissed the Queen had it not been for the glass. Their hands waved wildly as the Queen looked into their eyes and beamed at them.

"WE WANT KING"

After Their Majesties had entered the hotel, the whole crowd waited, sometimes impatiently, for an hour and a half. They cheered and broke into spontaneous cries of "We want the King!"

The band struck up familiar tunes and the huge crowd sang—sweetly and happily. The first tune was "It's a long, long trail a-winding." Then the tune of "A-roamin' in the gloamin'," floated from the balcony and the Calgary Highlanders' rich voices led the singing of the familiar Scottish air.

As the night air became crisp, and the evening deepened into twilight, the 10,000-voiced choir sang such old tunes as, "Pack up your troubles," "School Days," "Springtime in the Rockies," "Bells of St. Mary's," "My Bonnie lies over the ocean," "When Irish eyes are smiling," "Home on the range," "Sidewalks of New York," "John Brown's body," and others.

PATRIOTIC SONGS

They turned to patriotic songs and from the streets, the rooftops and open windows of every neighboring building, voices chorused, "Land of Hope and Glory," and "O Canada."

During this time, however, the pressure of the crowd and the strain of standing so long overcame a number of women and girls and some 75 had to be taken from the crowd to an emergency first aid station which was set up in P. Abele's pharmacy on 100 street. Men and nursing sisters of the St. John Ambulance Brigade, aided by volunteer first aid workers, did able duty caring for those who fainted or collapsed.

At 9:35 o'clock Their Majesties appeared on the balcony. The light by this time was fading into the deep blue of early night and street lights threw a modest gleam upward. But the King and Queen were in clear view.

ORDER OF GARTER

The Queen was in white, an ermine wrap about her shoulders, her diamond tiara flashing in the half-light. The King, in evening dress, wore the blue band of the Order of the Garter across his chest.

The Queen smiled and waved, first to one section of the crowd, then to another. The King's face also wore a fine smile as he hailed his subjects in his most characteristic gesture. He raised his right arm and twirled his hand from the wrist. It is a gesture for which he is known and it brought forth spontaneous outbursts of cheering.

They disappeared, the band played and the people sang, "God save our gracious King."

At 9:45 Their Majesties left the hotel. This time the top of their car was down and every person could view them in their farewell to Edmonton, where they had received the most spontaneous and hearty welcome so far in their Canadian tour.

SECRET SIDING

Due to leave at 10 o'clock, the Royal train did not pull out of the station until 10:10 p.m. It made a seven-hour stop during the night at a secret siding east of here and today moved on to Saskatoon.

On the platform His Majesty reviewed the guard of honor composed of 100 men of the Edmonton Regiment, 49th Battalion, under command of Captain R. J. Pratley. Major W. G. Stillman, officer commanding the regiment, attended. A 21-gun Royal salute was fired as the train left

KING. QUEEN HONOR WIDOW WAR VETERAN

Mrs. Sophia Pattison, Calgary, Talks With Their Majesties

Widow of one of the Great War's supreme heroes, wearer of the Victoria Cross presented to her after her husband's death at Vimy Ridge, Mrs. Sophia Pattison of Calgary experienced what she terms the greatest honor of her life when the King and Queen chatted with her on the steps of the Legislative Buildings on Friday.

When it was intimated she might be presented to Their Majesties, Mrs. Pattison came to Edmonton, but formal presentation within the Legislative Building was found impossible, so she was given a special place on the building steps.

The King and Queen stopped when they saw the Victoria Cross and two other decorations pinned on her breast and chatted with her. "So I feel I was more highly honored than if I had been formally presented. Oh, it was wonderful. me a thousand dollars.
I feel as if someone had just given

PLEASED TO SEE V.C.

"The King asked me when and where my husband died, and I told him it was June 3 at Vimy Ridge. The Queen asked me how I was and said she was pleased to see me wearing the Victoria Cross."

Mrs. Pattison wore a corsage of roses given to her by the ladies of the 50th Battalion Auxiliary at Calgary, and her expenses to Edmonton were paid by her employers, the same firm for whom her husband worked before he went overseas.

Mrs. Pattison was accompanied here by Mrs. Henry Pattison, wife of her son, who also served overseas and now is a member of the tank corps at Calgary.

City Grandstand World's Largest

More than 60,000 citizens of Edmonton and northern and central Alberta, about 40,000 of them school children, sat on the bleachers lining Portage avenue, the world's longest grandstand, and amidst tumultous cheering, watched their King and Queen ride past.

There was no denying the sincerity of the cheers which marked the progress of the Royal couple along the two-mile-long runway, and they showed their acceptance of the pledges of loyalty with salutes and gracious smiles.

The crowd had sat in their places for hours in order to obtain glimpses of their King and Queen—the first as the cavalcade drove westward to the end of the avenue, and the second when they returned along it.

POLICE AT HEAD

The procession was headed by two Edmonton city police motorcycles, and the royal car was escorted along Portage avenue by a specially trained motorcycle squad of Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

For Their Majesties, the drive along Portage had two results—they scored personal triumphs for themselves as individuals, and brought to the 60,000 western Canadians who saw them for the first time, a fine, worthwhile conception of Royalty which made them proud to acknowledge their King and Queen with songs and cheers.

At the west end of Portage avenue were three airplanes used in service out of Edmonton—a Bellanca on skis, a Barkley-Grow all-metal airliner on wheels, and a Norseman on floats. In front of them stood veterans of the Great War who had served as pilots and observers.

Although Their Majesties did not stop, they showed interest in the three planes, and His Majesty saluted while the Queen smiled graciously and waved to the war birds.

NURSES

Nurses from the Royal Alexandra hospital "doubled out"! About 100 viewed them on the way up Portage, and another 100 changed places with them on the way back. Thousands of school children sang songs and cheered tumultuously and waved their flags as Their Majesties drove by.

The streets were lined with Boy Scouts and ex-Servicemen with Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers placed at wide intervals. Practically every seat in the stands was taken, although there were a few empty ones near the centre.

Turn Face

CANBERRA, June 3—Australia is to have a more distinctive coinage, and new designs have been approved. The only change in the halfpenny is to have the kangaroo face right instead of left.

Royal Smiles for Loyal Edmonton

—By Bulletin Staff Photographer.

ROYALTY WILL HAVE MEMORY VISIT TO CITY

Queen Speaks With Hon. J. A. MacKinnon On Departure

"We have had a wonderful day. We will certainly remember Edmonton." With these words, spoken to Hon. James A. MacKinnon, Alberta's representative in the dominion cabinet, a few moments before the royal train left the city, Queen Elizabeth summed up the impressions left upon her and the King by Edmonton's spectacular welcome to the gracious heads of the empire.

And the King himself, smiling broadly, said to both Premier William Aberhart and Mr MacKinnon that he had "enjoyed" the "great welcome that this lovely city of Edmonton" had accorded him and his consort.

PARTY AT TRAIN

In addition to Premier and Mrs. Aberhart and Mr. and Mrs. MacKinnon, the party which accompanied Their Majesties to the train included Hon. J. C. Bowen, lieutenant-governor, and his wife; Mayor John W. Fry and Mrs. Fry; Capt. A. C. Dacre, aide to the lieutenant-governor, and his wife, and Brigadier G. R. Pearkes, V.C., D.S.O., M.C., Calgary.

Members of the royal visit committee and their wives also were on the platform, though they did not form part of the official group that accompanied Their Majesties.

Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, prime minister of Canada, who accompanied the King and Queen, chatted affably with the people on the platform ere the royal train departed.

MEMORY FRESH

Last person to speak with the Queen before the train left, Mr. MacKinnon said to Her Majesty: "Edmonton has been proud to be your host today. We will never forget this day and always carry its memory fresh in our hearts."

With the smile that bewitched Edmonton as it has charmed all Canada, the Queen was heard to reply:

"We have had a wonderful day. We will certainly remember Edmonton."

Neither the King nor the Queen, despite the exacting nature of the crowded day, betrayed any sign of fatigue. Indeed, they seemed reluctant to leave Edmonton which so obviously had taken them both to its heart.

Even as the train began to pull away from the station, the King and Queen, arm in arm, stood on the platform of their car, waving farewell to the cheering crowd which made the station echo with the plaudits they shouted to them.

But a more solemn note was added as the military band with the Edmonton regiment struck up the consecrated song of "God Save the King."

EYES WET

Singing this song for the first time in the presence of the King and Queen, many eyes of veterans and others were wet as the words rolled out as a mighty anthem in the city's good-bye—no, au revoir—to Their Majesties.

The King and Queen stood at attention as the song opened, and then, as the train began to leave, waved graceful farewells in recognition of the affectionate regard for them which prompted this gesture by the platform crowd.

And even as the train dwindled in the distance, and the royal visit passed into the sacred traditions of the city, shouted cries from the nearby crowd on the C.N.R. subway of "Hurrah for the King, hurrah for the Queen!" rang over the platform like a peal of triumph from some eloquent trumpet.

Shortly before ten o'clock, Their Majesties, returning from the government dinner at the Macdonald, came on the platform and slowly walked the length of the royal train to their own car—the last car—on which was emblazoned the royal coat of arms.

OFFICIAL PARTY

The Queen then chatted for a few moments with the official party which had accompanied her to the train, while the King inspected the guard of honor provided by the Edmonton regiment.

After the inspection was over the King talked with the official party, and then both stayed on the platform for about three minutes again, speaking with obvious friendliness and very informally to their official Edmonton hosts.

Both the King and Queen were "all smiles" as they talked and again and again said how "happy" they had been made by Edmonton's royal welcome.

Then they left, and the last touch they gave to their seven-hour stay which made Friday the greatest day in the history of Edmonton was a long affectionate wave of their royal hands and an even more royal smile.

Appeal Filed On Trial Venue For Gray Suit

Appeal was filed Saturday morning by George B. O'Connor, K.C., against decision of Mr. Justice A. F. Ewing setting the trial of the $10,000 damage action brought by E. L Gray, M.L.A., Liberal provincial leader, against Premier William Aberhart and Hon. E. C. Manning, for alleged libel for Calgary, and appeal is also taken against the jurist's decision that the trial be by jury. Notice of the appeal was filed on Neil D. Maclean, K.C., counsel for the defendants Saturday.

Provincial executive of the Alberta C.C.F. met in the party club rooms here Saturday to discuss plans for the holding of their annual provincial convention, Secretary Elmer Roper announced. Nominating conventions for 20 constituencies in the province have already been arranged. The meeting lasted all day Saturday.

Decorations At Legislature Are Seen By Crowds

Thousands of visitors flocked to the Legislative buildings on Saturday to view the decorations for the Royal Visit. The legislative chamber, rotunda, and the exterior decorations all drew their quota of sight-seers.

Long before the buildings opened at 9 a.m. there were people waiting to gain admission.

As a result of the desire of the public to see the sights, the buildings will remain open until 8 p.m. Saturday instead of closing at 12 o'clock noon, as is customary, and they will be open on Sunday from 12 noon until 6 p.m.

Many thousands passed through the buildings during Saturday morning.

Ex-Servicemen's Color Party

—By Bulletin Staff Photographer.

One of the most striking pageantry features of the Royal Progress Friday was the part taken by returned men of Edmonton and Northern Alberta in the official ceremonies. Here is the color party of the ex-servicemen's contingent lined up outside the Canadian National depot to greet Their Majesties. Included in the colors are 14 of the Canadian Legion flags which floated over Vimy Memorial in France. Other flags in the color party were those of the different ex-servicemen's units participating in the parade.

GUESTS HAIL RULERS WITH MERRY SONGS

People at Banquet Sing, "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows"

While thousands of enthusiastic subjects clamored for Their Majesties outside the Macdonald hotel, about 200 guests invited to the provincial government dinner in honor of King George and Queen Elizabeth burst forth into singing, "For They are Jolly Good Fellows."

Never before has the Macdonald hotel housed such a momentous event as that which took place Friday evening and never have such scenes been enacted without. Caught in a wave of tremendous enthusiasm, the crowd sang God Save the King, O Canada, Land of Hope and Glory, and did not cease until Their Majesties appeared on a balcony to wave and smile their greetings. And later as they left the hotel for the station, even more enthusiastic scenes were enacted.

The main rotunda of the hotel was divded for the occasion and the corridor leading to the main dining room was entirely reserved for dinner guests.

ON DUTY

Scarlet jacketed R.C.M.P. officers and plain clothes men were on duty in various parts of the hotel.

Invited guests arrived early and the multi-colored gowns of the ladies stood out in relief against the darker evening clothes of the men.

The corridor to the dining room from the rotunda was gaily decorated with Union Jacks. A room near the front door was reserved for Mrs. J. C. Bowen and Mrs. J. W. Fry and others.

For Their Majesties and party, the breakfast room had been reserved and was specially decorated for the occasion with heavy rugs, beautiful drapes and with two chairs specially for Their Majesties.

Their Majesties were given a tremendous ovation from those in public points in the hotel.

MET BY PREMIER

They were met at the main entrance to the building by Premier and Mrs. William Aberhart, who acted as hosts. They proceeded to their rest room. After a few minutes of conversation the Royal party proceeded to the dining room.

Her Majesty, who, for her Edmonton visit, wore white for the first time in the present tour, favored a white organiza gown, trimmed with gold piattes. She also wore a diamond tiara and a diamond and pearl necklace. His Majesty wore formal evening dress, adorned with the blue ribbon of the Order of the Garter and Badge of the Order.

Her Majesty's gay, infectious smile was present throughout the evening and His Majesty extended cheery, warmhearted greetings to all with whom he spoke.

As Their Majesties entered the dining room, the orchestra played God Save the King and the guests stood to attention.

AT HEAD TABLE

To His Majesty's left at the head table was Premier Aberhart, Queen Elizabeth and His Honor Lt. Gov. J. C. Bowen. To His Majesty's right was Mrs. Aberhart and then Premier W. L. Mackenzie King.

Most of the guests wore evening clothes, but a few were in business suits.

At the head table other than those mentioned were Mrs. Bowen, Lady Nunburnholme and Lady Katherine Seymour, ladies-in-waiting to the Queen; the Earl of Eldon, Lord-in-Waiting to the King; the Earl of Airlie, Lord Chamberlain to the Queen; T. Lascelles, acting private secretary to the King; His Grace J. H. MacDonald, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Edmonton; Rt. Rev. A. E. Burgett, Anglican Bishop of Edmonton; Rev. T. A. Rodger, representing the Presbyterian church, and Mrs. Rodger, Calgary; Rev. R. W. Dalgleish, representing the United church, and Mrs. Dalgleish, Claresholm; Rev. W. C. Smalley, representing the Baptist church, and Mrs. Smalley, Edmonton; Hon. James A. and Mrs. MacKinnon; Hon. Chief Justice Horac Harvey and Mrs. Harvey; Hon. Chief Justice C. R. Mitchell and Miss Barbara Mitchell; A. D. P. Henry, secretary to Premier Mackenzie King; His Worship Mayor J. W. Fry and Mrs. Fry of this city.

OTHERS

Others present included judges of the supreme court and their wives; members of the legislature and their wives; Alberta members of parliament and their wives; winners of the Victoria Cross and their wives; representatives of the press, and others.

Two toasts were drunk, one to His Majesty; the other to the Queen. Both were proposed by Premier Aberhart.

The dinner consisted of celery with mixed olives; sea food cocktail; crevettes glacees a la russe; consomme, filet de truite du lac Brittania, or filet of trout; breast of chicken; supre de poulets de grain jeanet; coeur de filet de boeuf aux premier, or choice filets of beef tenderloin; omelette surprise flambeaux with mignardises and demi tasse.

The wine list included sherry with the soup; followed with white Bordeaux with the fish and red Bordeaux with the meat. Champagne of 1928 vintage, the best of the post-war period, was served with the dessert and this was followed with creme de menthe or benedictine. The toast to Their Majesties, as is customary, was drunk in port.

Their Majesties appeared to enjoy the meal thoroughly. The King took some of all the courses save the fish, while The Queen ate some of every course save the soup.

Both tasted all wines except port and liquers.

William Williamson, a walter from the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, waited on His Majesty and George Gagnieux of the Macdonald staff, waited on The Queen.

After singing God Save the King, a group in one corner of the dining room started singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" and soon it spread to the entire assemblage. This completed a spontaneous call for "three cheers" went up and they were right lustily given.

PLACES FUR CAPE

When Their Majesties came out they were met at the door of their rest room by Miss Clara E. Jones, housekeeper of the hotel, who placed the fur cape over Her Majesty's shoulders.

Then, the King and Queen walked along the corridor and received cheers from the crowd in the rotunda and walked upstairs—at His Majesty's expressed desire, rather than to take the elevator—and greeted the tremendous throng outside, from a balcony. They smiled and waved and the volume of cheering must have warmed even their hearts, used as they are to wholehearted ovations.

ESCORTED BY FINLAY

Their Majesties returned to their rest room, to prepare for their departure. They were escorted downstairs by Claude Finlay, manager of the hotel.

Premier Mackenzie King came from the room and invited His Honor Lt. Gov. and Mrs. Bowen and others in to have a last few words with the Royal visitors.

Then Their Majesties left the hotel and as they entered their car and drove away they were cheered to the echo by the gathering lining the route from the hotel to the station.

Officials in charge said that the blue and silver, 12 car train would rest for seven hours at a secret spot between this city and Saskatoon prior to the visit Saturday to that city.

Following a short illness Mrs. Martha Sommerfeld, 50, of Ellerslie, died at the family residence on Friday. She is survived by her husband. Funeral services will be held on Monday at 2 p.m. at the Ellerslie Lutheran church with Rev. T. Gnauch officiating. Interment will be in the Ellerslie Lutheran cemetery.

Here's a Bobby to The Rescue

—By Bulletin Staff Photographer.

Police had quite a time ensuring the safety of thousands who visited Edmonton Friday for the Royal visit. In the above picture a member of the city police force is about to put a little girl back into the arms of her mother. The tot was about to wander out on Portage avenue.

Is Honored

JOSEPH HAIRE

103-year-old Edmontonian, with whom Their Majesties graciously chatted as they left the Parliament buildings on Friday. Haire was born in Ireland.

ROYAL VISIT SIDELIGHTS

Mounted police handling the large crowd during the Royal Progress commented on the enthusiasm and impetuosity of the crowd which at several points surged through the lines and swept in on the Royal car. "They are so loyal and keen to see their King and Queen that they could not help themselves, but they are good people and their restraint at the last moment showed the real depth of their loyalty and love for Their Majesties" one officer commented.

• • •

Militia and ex-servicemen were not the only persons called on for guard duty lining the streets along the Route of Royal Progress. The Ex-Servicewomen's Association members turned out for duty along Portage avenue and were able workers on the patrol.

• • •

Sudden emergency call for troops to help control the crowd at the Macdonald hotel Friday evening caught the Calgary Highlanders short on dinner. The troops were nearing dessert but the officers had not even bitten a bun. They sprinted all the way from the Masonic Temple to link arms and hold the crowd for more than two hours.

• • •

The sudden call for troops to man the evening crowd caught Lt.-Col. M. K. Greene A.A., Q.M.G., of Calgary, who was in charge of lining streets, mounted escort, artillery salute and breaking the Royal standards, in a moment of relaxation. He rushed from dinner without his Sam Browne belt.

• • •

City street railway handled the hugest crowd in its history but came through without a single accident. Motormen worked valiantly and the last cars were not in the barns until daylight was breaking, after 3 a.m.

• • •

Possibly the proudest man in all Edmonton today is Cecil Gould, radio commentator. At the University Hospital grounds Mr. Gould was following the Royal progress as Their Majesties greeted the Great War veterans. As the King and Queen turned from a cot The Queen caught sight of Mr. Gould who was standing close by. "We saw you at the station," she said. Mr. Gould replied: "It is a Royal Day for a Royal couple," to which the Queen replied: "We are very lucky with the weather, and we have received a glorious welcome in Edmonton."

• • •

"Where can we go now, Mummy, to see the King and Queen again," chanted a youngster in the front row of the crowd as the Royal Progress came from the C.N.R. Station to the Macdonald hotel for the government banquet. "You have seen Their Majesties three times already," replied the mother. "I know, Mummy, but I want to see the Queen again, she is so beautiful." And the section of the crowd that overheard the youngster's remark greeted it with a cheer of appreciation.

• • •

Many strange methods were used Friday to gain a good view of Their Majesties, but Wally Miller, Edmonton taxi-proprietor, solved his problem by grabbing a step ladder and climbing to its top as the Royal procession passed 101 street. He got a marvellous view, he stated, as he returned the step-ladder to the place where he found it.

• • •

From the 101 street subway to the corner of Jasper avenue the street was lined 10 deep with a cheering, seething crowd standing on tip toe waiting for Their Majesties to pass. Skirl of the pipes and excellent dancing by a group of girls in Highland costume was greatly appreciated by the large crowd in the vicinity of the Royal George hotel.

• • •

Still thrilled over the visit of Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth on Friday, Edmontonians on Saturday commenced the far less exciting task of cleaning up. In the early hours of the day workmen were seen in action. On McDougall hill, city streets and boulevards, men were picking up papers, cigarette cases and other refuse. Stands and bleachers began to disappear as rapidly as they had appeared; window covers were removed and a city-wide clean-up campaign was on.

• • •

Spectators at Jasper and 101 street on Friday who were waiting for the Royal Procession to come along were given a rare treat when the members of the Canadian Corps Association, parading north on 101 street were met by the visiting Calgary Highlanders marching south. Each parade was led by a pipe band. The crowd roared its appreciation of the splendid sight—the men who fought and won in France during the Great War and the younger generation—prepared to fight the next one—passing one another. The Highlanders as they swung along, peeked out of the corners of their eyes at the stalwart veterans who in turn, despite their martial tread, also showed their appreciation of the visiting troops.

• • •

The spectacle of a bank without money is a situation seldom met with and almost beyond contemplation in these days. Yet a bank at a point about 60 miles west of this city found itself without funds on Thursday evening. All roads were leading to this city for the Royal Visit and all the cash customers and those who could "put it on the cuff" were gathering in the spondulex. As a result the bank, which always carried sufficient for current needs, but did not prepare for the unprecedented event of a mild "run" in honor of Their Majesties, found itself "short". Hurried arrangements were made and things later went on "as usual."

• • •

• • •

Three Great War veterans who came a long distance to greet Their Majesties on Friday went home with chests swelled out to the point where their waistcoats could hardly stand the pressure. This particular group was at the junction of Kingsway and 101 street. Just as the Royal car turned onto Portage the three veterans sprang smartly to attention and saluted. His Majesty spotted them in the vast, cheering throng and smilingly bowed to them and returned the salute. "Boy, that was great," said one. "We have paraded before The King before but never before have we had a salute returned by the King himself." "Boy, are we proud," said another.

Ceremonial Marks Presentations At Capital Buildings

With expressions of fealty and loyalty conveyed on behalf of the people of Alberta by Premier William Aberhart and with the people themselves in thousands roaring out a welcome that rang down the Saskatchewan Valley in volume never previously attained, Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth were wolcomed to Alberta's capital city on the steps of the legislative buildings Friday.

Fitting ceremonial attended the occasion. Pomp and pageantry was at its height as the people of the province, through their Premier, gave a welcome that must have stood out even among the brilliant series of events that have crowded this Royal Visit.

Thousands more gathered on government buildings grounds and on every point that they could find where a view of the proceedings could be obtained. Across 97 avenue and up 108 street, thousands more gathered and viewed the memorable scenes from afar.

BRILLIANT SPECTACLE

The scene as a whole will live long in the memory of all who were present. Brilliant naval and military uniforms stood out against colored gowns of assembled women and the foliage. The cream and gold uniforms of the Social Credit band gave additional color to the scene.

As the Royal procession moved through the huge arch at the west end of the government grounds a tremendous cheer went up from the crowd. The procession, with motor cycle escort, pilot and police cars and a detachment of the 19th Alberta Dragoons in full dress, circled the government buildings, while Premier Aberhart and Mayor Fry dropped out to be ready to welcome Their Majesties when they arrived at the main entrance.

As the Guard of Honor from the R.C.N.V.R. presented arms and the band played "God Save the King" a tremendous cheer went up from the crowd.

As Their Majesties were welcomed on stepping out from their Royal car, Premier Aberhart greeted them and ascending half way up the main staircase, the Premier read his address of welcome. Inscribed on specially selected birch bark and artistically lettered and worked, the address was handed to His Majesty after it was read.

BOUQUET

Then little Marie Stacey, nine-year-old Edmonton born orphan girl, presented Queen Elizabeth with a beautiful bouquet of Joanna Hill roses, and fern. The flowers, of apricot color, were received by Her Majesty, with a gracious smile.

Following this Mayor J. W. Fry presented His Majesty with the address of welcome from the City of Edmonton and signed by the Mayor and all Aldermen.

This was followed by one of the most impressive ceremonies of the entire Royal visit, the presentation to Their Majesties, by Premier Aberhart, of seven Alberta winners of the Victoria Cross, the highest military decoration in the gift of His Majesty. Not previously in the present tour witnessed such a large number of V.C.'s presented.

The V.C.'s were Brig. G. R. Pearkes, V.C., D.S.O., M.C., officer commanding Military District No. 13, who won this decoration while acting as a company commander with the 5th Canadian Mounted Rifles; Lt.-Col. F. M. W. Harvey, V.C., M.C., who won the V.C. serving with the Lord Strathcona Horse; Major Harcus Strachan, V.C., who won the decoration for leading a historic charge of the Fort Garry Horse; Sergt. R. L. Zengel of Rocky Mountain House, who won his V.C. serving with the 5th Battalion; Sergt. Alex Brereton, Elnora, who won the V.C. while with the 8th Battalion; Private Cecil John Kinross, Lougheed, who won the V.C. at Passchendaele, while serving with the 49th Bn., the Edmonton Regiment, and Private John Chipman Kerr of Spirit River, who also won the V.C. while serving with the 49th Bn.

SPECIAL COMMAND

Then, by special command of His Majesty, Col. T. C. Sims, V.D., former commandant of the Edmonton Garrison and Lt.-Col. Louis Scott, D.C.M., were presented. Col. Scott, who served in France with the P.P.C.L.I., was an instructor at the Royal Air Force training base at Hastings in 1918 when His Majesty went there for instruction.

Both King George and Queen Elizabeth chatted with each for a brief period.

By this time the sun was shining down brilliantly and an equerry brought Queen Elizabeth a white parasol to match her white ensemble and King George raised the parasol and held it over her until they went within the buildings.

So pent up with spontaneous enthusiasm did the crowd become that it pushed forward through the police lines. The lines were re-established almost immediately.

CABINET MEMBERS

Members of the cabinet were on the steps as were leading government officials and members of the Royal visit committee. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Soutter; Dr. and Mrs. Malcolm Bow; Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Rankin; Mr. and Mrs. George B. Henwood; Mr. and Mrs. A. A. McKenzie; Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Trowbridge; Mr. and Mrs. A. Shnitka; Lt. Col. and Mrs. F. Stewart-Dunn; Maj. Gen. H. H. Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Sweeney, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Percival, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Plowman, and many others.

At the conclusion of the presentations Premier Aberhart said "May it please Your Majestes now to enter the legislative buildings" and the party then entered.

"I desire to thank the government and people of the province of Alberta for the loyal address presented to me today and to assure them, through you, of the gratitude which the Queen and I feel for the kind and affectionate words of welcome which it contains.

MANY DIFFICULTIES

"Although the people of Alberta, in common with other Canadians have had many difficulties with which to contend, I feel assured that, blessed as they are with a rich and fertile soil and with an enterprising and courageous spirit, they will continue to overcome them and make their full contribution to the strength and welfare of Canada, which is such an important member of the British commonwealth of nations.

"The Queen and I are happy to be with you and pray that divine providence may continue to bring peace and prosperity to the people of this province."

His Majesty entered the legislative buildings and chamber with Premier Aberhart and Queen Elizabeth entered with Mrs. Aberhart. Then followed Premier Mackenzie King and other members of the party.

As Their Majesties entered the legislative chamber, they proceeded half-way to the Speaker's Throne and there were met by Mr. Speaker Peter Dawson, of the Alberta legislature.

At this meeting, Premier Aberhart said, "Your Majesties, allow me to present the Honorable Speaker of the Alberta Legislature, Mr. Dawson and Mrs. Dawson."

Then, after places were taken, the premier said: "Your Majesties, with your permission, I should like to present a number of Alberta citizens, your loyal subjects, who have come to welcome you."

THOSE PRESENTED

ALDERMEN

As this ceremony ended, Premier Aberhart said, "Your Majesties, with your permission, His Worship the Mayor of the city of Edmonton would now like to present the aldermen of the city and their wives."

Mayor Fry then made the following presentations:

Alderman Daniel K. Knott and Mrs. Knott.

Alderman James H. Ogilvie and Mrs. Ogilvie.

Alderman Edward Brown and Mrs. Brown.

Alderman A. Blair Paterson and Mrs. Paterson.

Alderman M. Bentley McColl and Mrs. McColl.

As presentation of aldermen finished, Premier Aberhart said "Thank you, Your Majesties."

About 161 were presented in all, 152 in the buildings and nine outside.

He then said "May it please Your Majesties to sign our Royal Visit Register before leaving the chambers."

REGISTER

The register reposed on a table which had been brought in. R. A. Andison, clerk of the legislative assembly, brought two chairs for Their Majesties. The King walked over and signed the book, "George R.I." before Mr. Andison could place a chair. Queen Elizabeth signed "Elizabeth, R."

She also stood up to sign, although her chair was ready.

The register, a handsome leather book, is inscribed "The visit of Their Most Gracious Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth to the Province of Alberta, Edmonton, June 2, 1939. Offical list of those presented."

The book also contains portraits of Their Majesties.

Prior to leaving the chamber all those who had been presented also signed the book, which will be placed in the provincial archives.

The Queen snook hands in white gloves. The King's hands were bare. They left the chamber to the cheers of those who had been presented and the galleries filled with friends and relatives of those honored. So rapidly did the presentations move and so well organized was it that when the Queen stopped for a chat, there would be others waiting.

RECEPTION

Leaving the chamber Her Majesty walked first, with His Honor Lt.-Gov. J. C. Bowen and then followed His Majesty with Mrs. Bowen. They proceeded to His Honor's quarters at the legislative buildings where a reception was held at which members of His Honor's family were presented.

Their Majesties were deeply touched by pictures of their two daughters, the Princess Elizabeth and the Princess Margaret Rose, which adorned one room of the suite.

Coming out, Her Majesty with Mrs. Alex Mitchell of Lloydminster. An uncle of Mrs. Mitchell is the factor of Glamis Castle, family home of Her Majesty. The uncle is a personal friend of the present Earl of Strathmore and of his father before him.

SECRET OF GLAMIS

Leaving the legislative buildings amid thunderous applause, Their Majesties drove across the magnificent high level bridge in which they displayed deep interest.

Sings Here Sunday

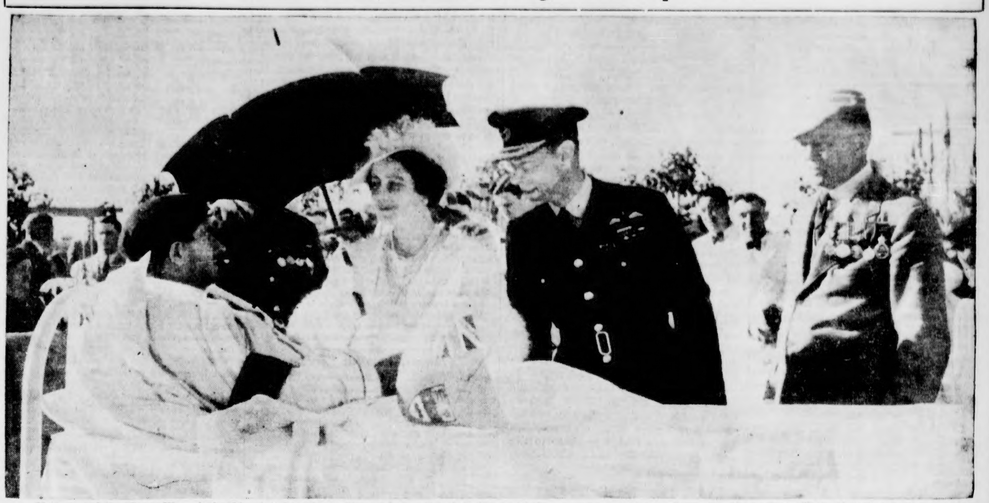
Mrs. Charles MacNutt, daughter of Premier William Aberhart and Mrs. Aberhart, who will be the soloist at McDougall United church at the Sunday morning service. She is contralto soloist at St. Andrew's Wesley church, Vancouver, and as Miss Ola Aberhart was well-known as a soloist prior to going to the coast. In the evening she will sing at the Edmonton Prophetic Bible Conference service at the Strand theatre.

Sympathy Bonds Tighten As Their Majesties Visit University Hospital



Veterans of the Great War—bed-ridden but bravely smiling and cheering their King and Queen—were recipients of gracious favor from Their Majesties as they stopped the Royal Progress Friday to come amongst them with words of sympathy. Accompanied by Col. R. T. Washburn, superintendent of the University Hospital, the Queen shook hands with many of the veterans, stopping to speak to them, asking how long they had been in the hospital, and enquiring after the nature of their injuries. The Queen is here seen talking to William Graham, Fort McMurray.

CITY WELCOME TO MAJESTIES IS FINEST YET

Secretary of External Affairs Lauds Edmonton on Reception

"Edmonton's welcome to Their Majesties was the finest yet seen in Canada," Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, first secretary of the department of external affairs, who is with the royal party on the trans-Canada tour, told Percy W. Abbott, K.C., after the royal progress was ended.

Mr. Abbott, chairman of the royal visit committee, said that this tribute from Dr. Keenleyside was unsolicited and was uttered just after the triumphal tour of the city drew to a close.

"Dr. Keenleyside said," reported Mr. Abbott, "that for sustained enthusiasm and cheering crowds the Edmonton reception was unique."

"For my own part, and on behalf of the royal visit committee," Mr. Abbott added, "I would like to say how deeply thankful we are to everyone who had a part in making this welcome as glorious as it was.

"To everyone, and this includes the many thousands of citizens who saw the royal progress and by their cheering made it such a success, the thanks not only of the royal visit committee but of all Edmonton are due," he concluded.

Hon. James A. MacKinnon, Alberta's representative in the federal cabinet, who has been the personal guest of Their Majesties at dinner and also been with them at Jasper, confirmed these reports when interviewed.

ARE AMAZED

"Naturally, I cannot say what all the reactions of the royal couple were, but I think it should be known that both were delighted with the welcome they received here and simply amazed at the grand sight presented by the crowded bleachers on Portage," he said.

"There has been nothing to equal it on the royal tour thus far. For concentrated enthusiasm this city set a new mark, and the King and Queen signified their delight at the obvious friendliness of the cheering crowds.

"Other cities," Mr. MacKinnon went on, "have had their own way of doing things, and comparisons are invidious, but I think this city can hold its head high, conscious that on Friday it gave royal welcome to a royal couple."

Son of Erin Is Happy As Royalty Honors Him With Greeting on Steps

One of Edmonton's happiest patriots today is 103-year-old Joseph Haire, veteran of the Fenian raids, who on Friday received one of the highest honors a king can bestow on a commoner when Their Majesties stopped and talked to him on the steps of the legislative buildings.

"It was the proudest day of my life," he said afterward. "Of course, I couldn't hear what they said—I am so deaf now, you know But I said to the Queen, 'May God bless you and take you home safe.' And when the King spoke to me, I asked God to bless 'em and keep 'em."

It had been originally planned to have Haire, one of the oldest persons in Canada, who this year was made a member of the Canadian Legion, presented to the King and Queen, but provincial government officials found this impossible to arrange.

SEAT PROVIDED

So while 174 prominent and more fortunate Albertans were being presented to Their Majesties in the Legislative buildings, a seat was provided for the aged Irishman on the steps outside.

As the royal party left the building, His Majesty noticed the white-bearded veteran and, turning to Premier William Aberhart, made an inquiry.

No Relaxation Of Immigration Laws Crerar Tells House

OTTAWA, June 3—Hon. T. A. Crerar, resources minister, told the House of Commons Thursday no relaxation of immigration regulations is contemplated for the purpose of permitting shoe workers to enter Canada to work in a proposed Bata Shoe Company plant, once operated in Czecho-Slovakia.

Gordon Graydon (Con., Peel) asked for the assurance "in view of the depressed condition of the shoe manufacturing industry in Canada."

CANADA'S ROYAL COMMEMORATIVES

Canada's first postage stamps were issued in 1851 and apart from special issues commemorating certain historical events, those that have directly connected with the British Royal Family are as follows:

Jubilee Issue 1897: Commemorat- sixty years of the reign of Queen Victoria, a set of sixteen values of the same design was issued. Portraits of the queen when she ascended the throne, and as she appeared as queen and empress sixty years later, appear on the stamps. The denominations are as follows—½, 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 10, 15, 20, and 50 cents, and 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 dollars.

Quebec Tercentenary Issue 1908: This set may be included, as the visit of the, then, Prince and Princess of Wales (the late King George V and his queen), was a great feature of the celebrations. There are eight values to the set, of pictorial or portrait designe; the ½ cent bearing portraits of the Prince and Princess, and the 2 cent portraits of King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra.

Imperial Conference Issue 1932: Commemorating the Conference at Ottawa of Great Britain and the British Dominions, although there was no Royal personage present, the set of three stamps issued at the time, may also be included, as the 3c stamps carried a portrait, of a new design, of His Majesty, King George V., and the 5 cent stamp, a portrait of the Prince of Wales, who was later King Edward VIII. The 13 cent stamp showed two globes and Britannia, an allegory of the British Empire.

Silver Jubilee Issue 1935: A set of six values appeared to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the reign of King George V. The Princess Elizabeth is shown on the 1 cent stamp, the Duke of York (the present King George VI.) is shown on the 2 cent, King George V. and Queen Mary on the 3 cent, and the Prince of Wales (later King Edward VIII.) on the 5 cent stamp, the 10 cent showed a view of Windsor Castle, and the 13 cent the Royal Yacht "Brittannia."

Coronation Issue 1937: No special or regular issues appeared for the reign of King Edward VII., and but one denomination, a 3 cent stamp, was issued to commemorate the coronation of the reigning monarchs. Portraits of H. VI. and H.M. Queen Eli pear in the design.

Royal Visit Issue 1939: The three stamps to commemorat visit to Canada of the first Kin Canada and his Queen, were fir placed on sale at the chief post offices across the Dominion on 15th May. The 1 cent value has portraits of the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, and the 3 cent stamp bears portraits of Their Majesties, while the 2 cent has a view of the National Memorial in Ottawa, which was unveiled during the Royal Visit.

Collectors may like to make a special collection of these issues, which will allow of attractive arrangement and "writing up" of the historical data in connection with each issue.

A Day We Won't Forget

The visit of the King and Queen to Edmonton yesterday will never fade from the memories of those who were privileged to be present. As they have done wherever they have gone, Their Majesties took the town by storm. The twelve-mile route over which they drove about the city was packed by cheering thousands on bleachers and sidewalks, from end to end. The day was perfect. Sunny skies and the rich greenery of trees and grass provided a setting that was ideal. The ceremonial proceedings were correct and impressive. The decorations were a delight to the eye. There were bands everywhere, and marching columns of men in uniform. An air show in the morning and a basketball game and fireworks in the evening were supplementary sources of interest. When the day was done and the shadows of night drew in, as the Royal train resumed its eastward journey, a lady in white and a gentleman in black stood on the observation platform and waved friendly adieus to throngs who lined the tracks at every street crossing. That gracious gesture was a crowning act of kindliness, and the picture was one it will be pleasant to recall.

Never before have Edmonton streets been so congested. By train and car and bus and truck, people poured into the city from every direction. From Red Deer to Dawson Creek, and from Lloydminster to Jasper, the vast area of central and northern Alberta was thoroughly represented. The crowds were orderly, good humored, and enthusiastic. The police had little trouble, save in their efforts to keep two or more persons from trying to occupy the same space at the same time. Traffic regulations were well observed; there was no reckless driving, and the day passed without serious mishap. The scene around the Macdonald hotel in the evening was remarkable. People packed the open spaces and streets in the vicinity, as tightly as people ever were packed anywhere, sang, cheered and chanted "We want the King; We want the Queen," until they appeared on the balcony; and then staged a prolonged ovation. This was the culminating and climaxing event of the day. The crowd, in fact, just "stole the show". And when a crowd does that on an occasion of the kind it marks the end of a perfect day.

How Much Money

One opposition group at Ottawa would have the Government issue $100,000,000 in new money, to be used for the construction of public works, while another group proposes the issue of $200,000,000. A Liberal member, from Kamloops, would cease borrowing for Dominion purposes altogether, and issue money as capital is needed.

The Minister of Finance said the Government already has all the powers that would be given it by the adoption of either proposal; leaving at least an implication that the creative power may be employed if that seems necessary. He added that adoption of either resolution would do nothing, beyond defeating the Government, but alarm the public by indicating that a new practice was being adopted.

The practice would be unusual, but not altogether new, and how alarming it would be to the public is a matter of doubt. Obviously it would not be alarming to some members of parliament; and plenty of evidence that an indefinite proportion of the public would also receive it without misgiving. It will be recalled that the Bennett Government did increase the supply of money, by some $40,000,000. The public were not disturbed thereby, nor did the Canadian dollar slump abroad, nor did inflation of credit follow.

The inference is at least clear that a moderate increase could be made without danger in any of these directions. And the debates on the subject have shown there is a feeling, in parliament and out, that the money supply should be kept in some definite relationship to the volume of the nation's wealth. What this relationship should be is a point of wide divergence, but since we are now doing business with managed currency it seems clear that some basis must be adopted upon which to regulate the amount of the supply.

If the discussions have shown there is obscurity as to what the gauge of the money supply should be—and they have shown plenty of that—they have at least demonstrated that monetary reform is a subject of very wide and active interest.

Maybe They'll Come Home

One of the amendments being made to the Dominion Income War Tax Act reads as follows: "Where any person carrying on business in Canada pays to a non-resident as price; rental, royalty or other payment for the use of any property or reproduction thereof, or for any right, an amount which is not in conformity with similar payments made by other persons in the same kind of business or which is unreasonable, then such payment may, for the purposes of determining the income of such person, be adjusted by the Minister to a reasonable basis unless he is satisfied that the payor and the recipient are not associated, controlled one by the other, or controlled by the same interests."

This looks like a barbed shaft aimed at wealthy Canadians who evade income taxation by taking up residence in other countries and draw profits from their Canadian investments by describing these remittances so as to make them appear to be necessary items in the operating costs of their establishments. If the Minister exercises his adjusting power with a sharp pencil, our Nassau colony of expatriated millionaires may find it as cheap to live and do their spending in Canada.

Editorial Notes

Religious services have been banned to radio listeners in Germany. The explanation given is that the radio there is a government institution. The real reason is that the kind of government that has been imposed on Germany does not show up well in contrast to the principles broadcast by the churches.

While Messrs. Hitler and Mussolini inspect and admire the costly fortifications with which they have studded the frontiers of their totalitarian states, residents of the United States and Canada continue to cross and re-cross the undefended boundary line which separates these countries, without being challenged by sentries, finger-printed, recorded, or photographed for the rogues' gallery. The contrast should mean something to anyone who is disposed to undervalue the advantages of living in these democratic countries.

Fifty Years Ago

From the Files of The Edmonton Bulletin

A meeting in connection with the Church of England was held in the public school house, Canon Newton being the chairman. A new parish of Edmonton was defined, consisting of the town and the land opposite on the south side of the river.

The C.P.R. has selected only 7,000,000 acres of land in the railway belt proper, out of a land grant of 18,000,000 acres.

Forty Years Ago

John Straus, the waltz king, is dead.

St. Paul and Buffalo baseball players were arrested for playing ball on Sunday last.

A cruiser has been sent to Devil's Island to carry Dreyfus to France. His case has stirred up world interest, and major political developments are being forecast in France due to the arrest of Dreyfus. He now receives a new trial.

Thirty Years Ago

Cape Town: The assembly passed a resolution for the adoption of the Act of Union of South African states and colonies.

Paris: The planet Mars is making one of its periodical approaches to the earth and astronomers all over the world are preparing to study it during the next few months, hoping to learn more about it.

Twenty Years Ago

Vancouver: A general strike is still in progress here, after beginning on Tuesday morning.

Calgary: Premier Borden says in a telegram to the Trades and Labor Council that the settlement of the strike is the business of the provincial governments.

Ten Years Ago

Setting what may be an all-time record, 362 homestead entries were filed in the Dominion land office at Edmonton during May, together with claims to nine soldier land grants.

New York: Deaths from the extreme heat that has prevailed for a week in the New England states has nearly reached the 50 mark.

London: As a result of the general elections, the Labor party is 21 seats short of holding a majority in the House of Commons.

Ottawa: The estimates carry the sum of $6,500,000 to complete the Hudson Bay railway and terminates at Churchill.

Current Comment

Land of the Rising Debt

In the opinion of the Japs the Chinese must bear a close resemblance to the animal in the French Zoo on whose cage was fixed the famous warning: "This animal is wicked. When it is attacked, it defends itself." It is proverbial that mankind will unite a hundred times more promptly and effectively under the urge of a common hatred than a common affection. China is more united than it has ever been, and it is hatred—eminently justified hatred—of the Japs that has worked the miracle. When the Japs began this "special undeclared war" against China, they expected a speedy collapse of the enemy. When the collapse tarried, they hoped and thought that China would not be equal to the deepening strain. Once more they were wrong. Saul, the Son of Kish, went out in search of his father's asses, and found a kingdom. The Japs have suffered the opposite of that pleasant experience. The Chinese are, uniquely, the people who know how to wait. But they are not only waiting; they are fighting back on all fronts. In the field the Japs are feeling the weight of Chinese bravery and determination to crush the hated and hateful invader; at home they are feeling the crushing weight of the cost of their "politique de magnificence."—Truth (London).

Transatlantic Air Service

The Imperial and Pan-American Airways will shortly complete arrangements for the transatlantic service. There are four air-liners in the Home Fleet: Imperial Cabot, Clyde, Connemara, and Caribou. They are fast 24-ton, four-engined flying boats capable of carrying, when refuelled in midair, a load of 14,000 lbs.—the equivalent, at 200 lbs. per passenger, of 70 passengers—on a 1,000-mile flight. When ready for passenger traffic, these flying boats will be equipped with furnishings similar to those on Imperial Airways' standard flying boats which for the last two years have been operating regular services between England and Africa, India and Australia. These flying boats are the first commercial aircraft in the world to be equipped with (1) sleeve-valve engines; (2) a retractable transparent dome for purposes of astronomical observation, and (3) facilities for refuelling in the air. Imperial Airways Transatlantic Division is under the command of Captain Wilcockson, who in 1937 made a series of survey flights to Canada and the United States in the Caledonia. Whilst the terminus in the New World of this great enterprise is to be at New York, we are glad that the route will be all-Empire by way of the Shannon base, Botwood, Newfoundland, and Montreal.—The Empire Review (London).

Blow to Loan Sharks

After several failures and delays a bill to regulate the small loan business in Canada finally passed the House of Commons on Wednesday. As it had previously passed the Senate, it should go into effect very shortly.

The new measure represents a compromise. It requires all money lenders to obtain licenses and fixes the maximum charge for interest, expenses and services at two per cent a month for loans lasting 15 months or less and one per cent a month for loans extending more than 15 months. An amendment designed to cut these rates in half was defeated.

While 24 per cent a year seems like a large interest rate it is insignificant compared to what loan sharks have received. An Ontario investigation some months ago revealed something of the extent to which small borrowers were being gouged.

The control feature of the new legislation should be important. It will confine the business largely to reputable companies whose books will be open to Government inspection and should free many working people from the grasp of unscrupulous usurers. The problem is one which has vexed many Governments all over the world. It is hardly likely that the present legislation will afford a permanent remedy, but it should at least be a move in the right direction. —London (Ont.) Free Press.

The Royal Visit

The visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to America probably is designed primarily to emphasize the ties of blood and sentiment that still knit the peoples of England and Canada, even though the legal ties are all but dissolved.

It is from one viewpoint astounding that in a previous four centuries no reigning monarch of Britain has ever visited his Dominions in the New World.

If an earlier George had displayed anything approaching the interest in America which now animates the rulers of Europe, the United States might never have come into existence. The present territory of this country and of Canada probably would have developed as a single dominion.

Britain today looks at a Canada whose development, in many respects, has followed the pattern of the United States rather than that of the Old World.

There has grown up on the American continent a feeling of good neighborliness in marked contrast with the hatreds and suspicions of Europe.

For more than a century no fortifications have marked the boundary between Canada and the United States, a fact that must seem pertinent indeed to Royal visitors, well acquainted with the precautions undertaken to protect their own persons and those of millions of their subjects from the high explosives, incendiary bombs and poison gases which would be dumped upon London and its environs in the event of a European war.

Loyal Canadian subjects have an opportunity to pay homage to their rulers during the Royal progress.

The United States will extend its hospitality to the visiting monarch and his consort, when they cross the international boundary into this nation's domain. That welcome will not merely bespeak the civilities that one great state pays to another, but will be animated by the deep feeling that has existed through the centuries between two branches of the English-speaking peoples.

And beyond the meaning to America of the Royal Visit is the meaning that it may have to the world.

No treaties, alliances or other affairs of state are to be considered during the visit, or as its result.

But surely the peoples of a distressed, war-threatened Europe will be reminded anew of the amity that exists between neighboring peoples of this continent and of their desire to remain at peace, not merely with each other but with all nations. Such an example can hardly be disregarded, even where the technique of totalitarian systems undertakes to fan the flames of racial and international discord, rather than nurture the spirit of friendliness.—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

The Passing Show

By J. S. COWPER

Did you see Mr. Johnston in the parade yesterday?

HOPE YOU SAW "MR. JOHNSTON"

No; not the esteemed Jasper avenue supplier of needs. "Mr. Johnston" rode in the same carriage as the winsom, smiling Queen Elizabeth. You may never have heard of "Mr. Johnston," unless you were in the British Navy in the strenuous days before Jutland. During the time His Majesty King George VI was learning the trade of a naval officer as a youngster of 14 in the naval college at Osborne, taking instruction four years later in the gunroom of H.M.S. Collingwood, in engine rooms and workshops, in turret and wardroom, he was never known as Prince Albert. He was always "Mr. Johnston." No fuss or frills in the Navy.

It was "Mr. Johnston," not Prince Albert, who served as second in command of the gun turret on H.M.S. Collingwood at the Battle of Jutland in the fight with the German battleship Derfflinger. Only in despatches by Lord Jellicoe, praising the coolness and intrepidity of the young officer, did "Mr. Johnston" revert to his rank as the son of the monarch. Among the King's most treasured possessions is the white ensign the Collingwod flew in the Battle of Jutland.

The young prince not only qualified to be an officer in the navy; he also qualified as a flying officer in the Royal Naval Air Force. No wonder that as King he has popularized himself with the men of the Forces.

A BIT ABOUT REJUVENATION

I've an elderly friend, approaching his seventieth year who has "rejuvenated" himself with remarkable results. Three years ago he looked his age, and felt himself sagging. He has an island on the coast, and was planning to go to England to enquire into the Steinach and Voronoff methods when chance brought to his island one day a doctor who was holidaying, and who advised him to take a glandular treatment. It consists only of the taking of pills containing gland extracts.

As a matter of general theory we're all what our glands make us—fat or thin, tall or short, wise or foolish, brave or cowardly. I've probably ventured the theory in this column, but the fact is real life is not surprising. He has not only added 30 pounds to his original 160 and become active again in mind and body; he is even reading without spectacles and his hair has grown again in its natural color.

Doesn't that postulate some problems—in economics as well as in biology and morals. Instead of reviling our compassionless old age law that requires a man or woman to have one foot in the grave and the other on a banana skin, before it will allow the septuagenarian a measly $20 a month to exist on, it may bring the miserly pension within reach of hale and hearty men.

The actuarial basis of all pension and annuity schemes will need to be altered. Governments, burdened with armies of youth on their hands for whom the profit system cannot create jobs, may be further burdened with armies of youthful septuagenarians, octogenarians, nonagenarians and centenarians who refuse to die.

* * *

HELP FOR THE POLITICIANS

The foregoing comes to mind because this question of glandular treatments has reached the British House of Commons. Neither the doctors, the clergy nor the life insurance companies have made protest against this means of aiding Nature to prolong human life. It came from Mr. Lyons, a Conservative M.P. who is shocked at reports that football players taking part in the 1939 cup final are taking glandular extracts from animals to pep them up. He didn't make any objection to them taking a beef steak to pep them up, or even beef extract. It was the idea that they should take glandular extracts that shocked him.

Major Walter Elliott, Minister for Health, sidestepped the request for an enquiry. "The gland extracts," he said, "are included in the British pharmacopoeia, and I presume, are administered under medical supervision. I do not consider an enquiry necessary."

Far better indeed, had the Conservative-minded Mr. Lyons, opened a subscription list to present every member of the Chamberlain cabinet with a three months supply of glandular extracts. So many politicians exhaust themselves with promises at election time, that anything to pep them up to a point where they will fulfill their promises, should be a blessed aid.

THE LIGHT OF LIBERTY

Schoolmasters Depression has taught all of us to think greater thoughts. Peace, democracy, liberty, brotherhood, command the attention of minds once given wholly to petty things.

Once we took liberty for granted, and seldom heard about it, except in political speeches or during patriotic celebrations. Now liberty, in its varied connotations, has commanded the thought of all of us; and newly we perceive the preciousness of this heritage of which we are custodians.

"For ever in thine eyes, O Liberty,
Shines that high light whereby the world is saved.
And though thou slay us, we will trust in thee."

For freedom didst Thou set us free, O Lord; and we pray that we may never again be entangled in the yoke of bondage. Amen.

The Kilts and Bagpipes

Editor, Bulletin: It seems to be generally overlooked that unless one is Scotch and a member of a Highland clan, it is a piece of unwarranted impertinence to wear, except as fancy dress, the Scotch kilt.

Unless my memory is at fault, a French tailor, employed by an English officer, designed the what now passes muster for the kilt.

The bagpipes are beloved by all primitive people. There's nothing that can be done about it. Time and education may bring about the desired change.

The bagpipes, kilts and a carefully cultivated accent that has little or no relationship to any known dialect that makes Caledonia so stern and frightfully wild when it is heard, are but adventitious aids to mediocrities seeking advertisement who might otherwise pass unnoticed.

BOSWELL.

Sharp Contrast

Editor, Bulletin: It was a wise custom of the ancient Romans to hold the anniversaries of great men in nobler repute than their own birthdays. By so doing they sought to honor those supreme figures who stand as symbols of national honor and imperial renown.

On Friday, as this city poured out its loyalty to a beloved king and his gracious consort, as the reverence that belongs to a king was sweetened and enriched by the love his grateful subjects feel to his person, I could not but let my mind wander back, in musing retrospect, to the triumphs of Imperial Rome and contrast those celebrations with the one we were privileged to see here.

Here were no captives bringing the coerced tribute of a slave to his conquerors. Here was no brazen exultation in empire, no braggart creed of conquest or dominion. Here all was dedicated to the arts of peace, not the victories of war; to the sweet enduring felicities of life; to a King and Queen who ruled not over, but for, their subjects; and who esteemed the solemn and exalted office to which they had been called as a trust for the abuse of which they were deeply answerable to their own consciences, and which they therefore were determined to sanctify and ennoble by all the faithful and valorous service it lay within the compass of their powers to render.

The sunshine of a bright promise gleamed upon the faces of our King and Queen on Friday. May it be a sort of vision splendid to guide the Commonwealth and its peoples, of disparate race but one in love of the crown and devotion to the empire, in the strenuous days that may lie ahead.

I would like to suggest, too, that the visit of Their Majesties has taught us all a profound truth about the national ideals of Canada, which it is time we all took earnestly to heart.

The tribute to Their Majesties, so vast, so unstinted, so spontaneous, so general, showed that the ties of empire and love of the throne are as deeply planted in the hearts of Canadian people as they ever were. It must have come as a surprise to the clamant apostles of that dubious creed of neutrality for Canada, of a smug and selfish complacency when great issues challenge the empire, to find that the overwhelming majority of Canadians could not even conceive what such an argument means, so repugnant is it to their instincts and reason.

Friday will be a great day forever in the history of Edmonton. It was a great day in the life of Canada, too. And may we hope that it is a day upon which the King and Queen too will sometimes like to dwell with happy thoughts as they turn over the gracious pages in their album of memory?

A BYSTANDER ON FRIDAY.

Horn Honking

Editor, Bulletin: Cannot something be done in this fair city of ours be done to reduce the horn honking?

All over people are crying out against it, even from hotels.

I trust that through the influence of the press this nerve-wracking honking can be brought to a head and settled.

Sunshine Shafts

Politician (angrily): "Those newspapers tell abominable lies about me."

Friend: "And yet they might do worse."

"Do worse! What do you mean?"

"They might tell the truth."

"He called me a blithering fool," stormed Coddling, "What do you think of that?"

"I scarcely know," replied Poindexter, "What does blithering mean?"

The original creation and the powers of irritation
Of the common, or infuriating fly,
Are things which neither churches, nor zoological researches
Can possibly attempt to justify.

Not the nicest of the features of these horrid little creatures
Is the way they catch a fellow when he's down,
And with maddening persistence, choose the points of least resistance
On which to run around and play the clown.

And there's nothing in the world that they respect

Or mar romantic evening in the glade;
They can ruin the impression of a dignified expression
Or the steadiness of soldiers on parade.

I can say without compunction that there isn't any function
To be quoted to the credit of the fly—
Though some people have a bias that such things are sent to try us,
Yet can anyone explain the reason why?

40 Youngsters Lose Parents

It was lost kids' day around the city police station Friday, as more than 40 youngsters of various ages, shapes, sexes, colors and hometowns were brought in for safekeeping after having been found wandering about the city lost. They were placed in charge of Police Matron Mrs. Emma Pennefather. However, they were all claimed by parents and guardians, the last saying a regretful farewell to the police station staff at 1 a.m. Saturday.

Britain Will Make Final Try to Bring Russia Into Bloc

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON, June 3.—In a final effort to bring Russia into the European peace bloc, the British government may drop all references to the League of Nations from its plan of a mutual defence pact linking Great Britain, France and Russia, it was reported in diplomatic circles Friday.

While making a concession to Russian demands on this point, Britain probably still stands firm on the determination not to give specific pledges of military aid to the three Balkan countries—Finland, Estonia and Latvia—which foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff demanded in his speech to the supreme Soviet Wednesday.

Britain also will refuse to extend the pact to cover the far east, should the Soviet make that demand.

AROUSED SUSPICIONS

The British formula which Molotoff criticized as "inadequate" contained a reference to the League of agreed the pact should be linked with the principle of the League covenant but not to its machinery for dealing with aggressors.

The Soviets, according to the view taken here, mistook this reference to the League as an "escape clause" to permit Britain and France to dodge responsibilities by invoking the slow and cumbersome League of Nations machinery.

NOT ESSENTIAL

It would not surprise observers here if Britain dropped this suggestion, which is not considered essential to carry out the objects of the anti-aggression pact. It has been described by some as a device used by Prime Minister Chamberlain to make a military tieup with the Soviet more acceptable to his followers.

The British formula would cover the three Baltic countries in its general terms. It would commit Britain, France and Russia to go to the assistance of any of them if they request aid in repelling an invader.

The British press today expressed restrained optimism over negotiations for the pact.

There was an inclination here to believe that all Russia's demands are satisfied by the British proposals referred to by Molotoff before the supreme Soviet in Moscow as "inadequate."

Meanwhile the elaborate reception in Berlin for the Yugoslav Regent, Prince Paul, was seen as an effort on the part of the Rome-Berlin axis to counter British success in concluding an agreement with Turkey and coming close to an agreement with Russia.

"But these very agreements make Belgrade extremely reluctant to commit itself to the dictators," commented The Daily Mail (Independent). "It would be unnatural for Yugoslavie, a Slav country, to take opposite side from Russia, and inexpedient for her to antagonize Turkey, with whom she is allied through the Balkan entente."

Sampling Canada

HULL, Eng., June 3—A "Canada Shop" opened here for a fortnight under the Dominion government's "Canada Calling" program, sold 16,573 individual samples of Canadian food.

Major And Minor Notes

By John Oliver

Two events in the music world have caused widespread comment recently. One is the illness of Ignace Jan Paderewski, which forced him to cancel his United States concert tour, following a seizure just before a recital at Madison Square Garden and the other is the change in nationality carried out by Fritz Kreisler. Thus, two of the outstanding contemporary executants are very much in the limelight at present. The musical world has suffered a severe shock in the news that Paderewski's seizure at Madison Square Garden probably will write "finis" on his career before the public. But if this is so, he retires honored among musicians. He is the foremost pianist of this day and his romantic career in music, coupled with his unremitting efforts on behalf of his native Poland have made him even during his lifetime, an almost legendary figure. As a composer, too, he has made his mark. While he undoubtedly wll go down to posterity as the composer of the very charming Minuet in G, nevertheless, an opera, symphonies and other major works have come from his pen. His opera, Manru, has been performed at the Metropolitan in New York. He was seen and heard here recently in the motion picture Moonlight Sonata, and those who saw it will be doubly repaid in the knowledge that never again may he appear in public.

Fritz Kreisler, violinist, pianist and composer, born in Vienna and wounded at the front during the Great War while serving as captain in the Austrian army on the Russian front, recently announced in an interview given in Paris, that he had received French naturalization papers. He has made Paris his home in recent years. He has studied in French conservatories and is an officer of the French Legion of Honor. The Paris-Midi, in publishing the interview, quoted Kreisler as saying: "In a world carried away by the folly of men, France still represents a stronghold in which are intact all ideas which make up human dignity, honor, liberty and love of art. If the pleasantness of living has lost in the last several months, a little of its reputation, on the other hand it seems accompanied by ancient virtues: courage, energy and patience. These are the virtues which appeal to my heart." Kreisler has appeared here in recital under the Women's Musical club banner on two occasions. He is generally regarded as the foremost violinist of this day.

Here's one for the wonder book. Several years ago a man in New York state traded a cow for a violin. He wanted music, the other party to the transaction wanted milk. Now he has discovered that the violin is a Stradivarius worth the price of a whole stockyard, and he is torn between his desire for music or for money. The other is serene and happy. The cow is still alive and yielding its modest but regular returns on the original investment. If the man holds on to the cow, his children will no doubt own the calves and may expect that in the course of nature the ultimate returns in milk and serenity will at least be equal to the monetary value of the Stradivarius.

Those who attend the Edmonton Prophetic Bible Conference meeting at the Strand theatre on Sunday will have the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Charles MacNutt, daughter of Premier William and Mrs. Aberhart sing in the course of the service. Mrs. MacNutt, as Miss Ola Aberhart was a well known soloist at Calgary and since taking up residence at Vancouver she has continued her vocal work. She is contralto soloist at St. Andrew's Wesley church, Vancouver. During a visit here last year, she sang in the course of one of the Prophetic Bible Conference services.

Successful in every way the Edmonton District Music Festival held here early in May sufficiently encouraged the committee in charge to decide on a similar festival in 1940, so, early in May of next year, the event will be repeated. This decision of the committee, made at a recent meeting with Howard Stutchbury in the chair will meet with wide favor from many music lovers and music students alike.

* * *

The provincial festival is held here every three years. The intervening years witness it at Calgary and Lethbridge. It was at Calgary this year and will be at Lethbridge next year. In 1941 it will be back here. In the two years it is away, interest is apt to slacken off and requires considerable working up again. By holding the district festivals, this interest is maintained. As is customary, the district festival next year will be held prior to the provincial event.

* * *

The committee meeting reelected Howard Stutchbury as chairman with Mrs. T. Winslow Hamilton, vice chairman and H. G. Turner as secretary-treasurer. The executive appointed is as follows: R. R. Couper, Mrs. J. A. Buchanan, G. A. Kevan and W. J. Hendra. Mrs. Hamilton and Messrs. Stutchbury and Turner were named delegates to the provincial executive with Mr. Couper as substitute delegate.

* * *

No decision has been made regarding engagement of adjudicators. Many expressions of praise have been heard regarding the splendid work accomplished by Sir Ernest MacMillan, who acted as adjudicator this year. While a complete financial statement is not available, it is understood the festival broke even.

Splendid reports have been received of the music provided by the Edmonton orchestra under the direction of Dennis Clayton, which played for Their Majesties visit to Jasper on Thursday. The same orchestra played for the government dinner at the Macdonald hotel Friday evening.

Your Health — By Dr. Frank McCoy

Berries are very wholesome fruits and because of their agreeable flavor, are welcomed by millions. A berry is a small pulpy fruit containing water, natural fruit sugar, fruit coloring and flavoring, minerals, vitamins and fruit acids.

One of the advantages of growing these small fruits in the home garden is that they come into bearing more quickly than is the case with tree fruits.

Those who live in districts where such berries as strawberries, blackberries, huckleberries and dewberries grow wild, are especially fortunate, as they may enjoy these wholesome small fruits in return for the labor of gathering them.

When using berries I suggest that you use only those which are completely ripe. Most ripe berries contain from 8 to 12 percent of sugar. If the berries are under-ripe you will not enjoy the full, sweet flavor.

In questioning patients, I find that the strawberry is the best liked, however, raspberries and blackberries are other popular favorites. The strawberry seems to have gotten its name from the fact that it was found under the mown grass. Another favorite is a new berry which has been developed for market purposes, and which has a large size.

The mineral content of berries is especially good. For example, strawberries are good sources of iron. Other minerals supplied by berries are magnesium, sodium, silicon, potassium and phosphorous. Due to the mineral content, berries are placed with the alkaline-forming foods and may thus be used with profit in the diet, as a balance to the foods which are acid-forming.

In using fresh berries in the diet, I find that the best results are obtained when the berries themselves are kept away from meals containing starchs. One excellent combination which you may use is the combination of berries with cream or milk. This will provide you with a very satisfying luncheon meal, and may be used with particular advantage on a warm day. Or, if you wish you may make a complete luncheon meal from berry ice cream, which has been prepared with fresh berries.

Berry sherbets and whips are other delicious dishes. When using a dish of berries as a dessert, I suggest that you omit starch at that meal, using your starch at some other meal of the day. A good combination for a dinner meal would be as follows: Broiled steak; cooked summer squash; string beans; lettuce and celery salad; and berries with whipped cream.

During the berry season you have a wonderful opportunity to treat yourself to these wholesome small fruits, which possess such distinctive and delicate flavors, and which are at the same time, so good for you from the health standpoint.

Royal Standard Crosses Atlantic

By A. R. HEAVER

Editor "National Message" Weekly, Official Organ of the British-Israel-World Federation

IN LEAVING the shores of Great Britain for the Continent of North America, Their Majesties the King and Queen set out upon a path which may prove to be one of the most momentous journeys ever undertaken by any British Sovereign. For the first time the people of a British Dominion see their Reigning Monarch on their own soil, after which King George VI and his Consort will create a unique precedent by crossing the frontier into the territory of the United States.

ROYAL PROGRESS

The Royal progress from Atlantic to Pacific is almost like a commentary on Psalm lxxii, 8: "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth," which incidentally represents a striking geographical description of the Dominion of Canada. The true Significance of the Statute of Westminster came to life in dramatic fashion when His Majesty, as King of Canada, visited the seat of Government in the Dominion and placed the Royal signature upon Acts passed by its own Parliament.

At a time in world history when "storms beat upon the ramparts of civilization," His Majesty was escorted by the Royal Navy, whilst himself travelling as a passenger in an unarmoured vessel. As the Times puts it: "A certain symbolic rightness makes appropriate the departure from the ancient custom that the King, when on the high seas, travels in a Man-of-War. Could there be more apt expression of the truth that, in the world as it lamentably is, the Empire must be at all points armed for defence, but that what is to be defended is an ideal of peace?"

VISIT DEMONSTRATION

Certainly, the visit of the King and Queen is a demonstration of "how large is the area of the world's surface within which the foundations of peace have been well and truly laid," and, in leaving their Island subjects, Their Majesties ventured forth knowing that they would find on the other side of the Atlantic the same expression of loyalty and devotion. It can hardly be altogether without significance that the King and Queen should become guests of that "Great People" of the United States at a time when they are celebrating the memory of George Washington—that great Englishman who claimed "to represent the English political tradition better than the Statesmen who in his time bore rule in London," and whose genius resulted in the American Colonies becoming the mighty "lost" Dominion.

Today, Washington is accepted in England as a national hero. Students of British-Israel have the added advantage of seeing the Divine purpose behind this separation and severance of allegiance which was clearly prophesied in the Scriptures, where the divergent destinies of the descendants of Ephraim and Manasseh is clearly marked. The inevitable links which bind the two people together today are based upon a common faith in the high ideals which constitute the basic principles of civilization. The Scriptures confirm that spiritual bonds are stronger than racial affinities.

TRUE DOCTRINE

So, in the days when the theories of extreme nationalism torment the world, it is encouraging to see the example of the Anglo-Saxon peoples, in whom is exemplified the true doctrine of race, based upon the covenants "made with our fathers," which are incorporated in the New Covenant which God has made with the House of Israel for ever.

In the true conception of race we realize that it is not sufficient to say that we have Abraham to our father. Yet the Kingdom of God must have a national basis for its material manifestation. When the Anglo-Saxon people collectively enshrine Christ as the Keystone of the National edifice, then the way will open for a world fellowship of nations.

For the first time the Royal Standard crosses the Atlantic. May the Royal visit—creating new bonds of mutual trust and understanding—contribute towards this great quest.

SLUMS' PROTEST IS PRIZE MUSIC

NEW YORK, June 3.—The music that won the Pulitzer Prize scholarship fo r1938 is a poor boy's plaint against the squalor of the slums.

The boy was Dante Fiorello, son of Italian immigrants. He won the $1,500 Prize scholarship on the basis of the eighth of 12 symphonies he has composed. The winning symphony was his protest against the slums in which he lived. It was begun when Dante, now 29, was in his early 'teens. It was written between classes at a Music School.

Dante was born in the slums and he cringed from them. But even in the slums no alley is too dark or too remote to be reached by the magic of music. The sound reached Dante early in life and at seven he was fashioning melodies, by ear, on a harmonica. At 14 he went to the Music School where he became a cellist, and not a very good one.

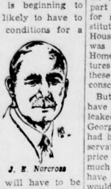
But the urge to compose was part of his existence and between practice sessions at Betthoven, Mozart and Bach he would remain in the halls to write down his musical impressions. They all reflected his horror of the squalor of the slums and sang his joy at the sight of the better side of life.

In recent years, Dante's compositions have received increasing recognition. First came the professional Musicians' Award, then four Guggenheim fellowships and now the Pulitzer Prize which he will use for study abroad.

Dante's ability is entirely native. He has never studied composition. His inspiration and encouragement all stem back to the Music School days and his themes from his artistic reaction to the squalor and darkness of his earlier environment.

Our Old Country Letter — By J. E. Norcross

LONDON, Eng., (By Mail)—For the time being the threat of immediate war seems to have passed but the country is beginning to realize that it is likely to have to live under crisis conditions for a long time to come.



J. E. Norcross

Mr. Lloyd George asked in the house the other day whether, in view of this, the policy of training for war should not be altogether reconsidered while in the city of London it is being suggested that fiscal policy will have to be adjusted to conform more closely to the needs of a semi-mobilized Britain.

This latter would means increased regulations of industry by the ministry of supply, excise duties on luxury consumption and restrictive tariffs on non-essential imports for the protection of the nation's balance of foreign payments. A second Budget in the autumn, providing for increased borrowing powers and still more taxation is already being forecast.

Mr. Lloyd George put his rhetorical question in the course of a speech in which he surprised the Government and disgusted the Labor party and the Opposition Liberals by speaking strongly in favor of conscription. Conscription, of course, is not a Liberal doctrine.

The Liberals further learned to their astonishment that Mr. Lloyd George had been a conscriptionist at least since 1911, and that in that year he and Mr. Asquith had tried to sell the pass to the Conservatives.

With Mr. Asquith's consent, he told the House, he had put forward conscription proposals to Mr. Balfour, then leader of the Conservative party.

If those proposals had been accepted, he continued, we would have had 1,500,000 trained men in August, 1914. We would have had rifles, the necessary officers and guns.

"I wish," he added, "it were possible to think that we had three years to spare for reconsideration of the problem. But the issue would be decided before that, one way or the other."

Nobody, except the leaders on both sdes, knew anything about Mr. Lloyd George's conscription proposals n 1911, and an effort is being made to remove the impression left by him that the Conservatives were then opposed to compulsory service. It is stated that the conscription proposal was only part of a comprehensive scheme for settling the outstanding constitutional issues between the two Houses of Parlament, one of which was the Lords' veto and another Home Rule for Ireland. The overtures were rejected on account of these latter and not on account of conscription.

But what an uproar there would have been in Liberal circles had it leaked out then that Mr. Lloyd George, with Mr. Asquith's consent, had been bargaining with the Conservatives for Home Rule at the price of conscription! It is not too much to say that the party would have been wrecked, and that both would have gone into the political outer darkness with the consequence that the history of the Empire and of the world from 1914 onwards would have been very different from what it was. At all events, Mr. Lloyd George would probably never have had the chance of becoming the Pitt of the twentieth century.

People are now beginning to plan for their holidays again, although for some time it seemed hardly worth while to think of anything so far ahead. Even yet, there is a feeling of unreality about preparations for events more than a few months away.

Be that as it may, the government is showing sufficient confidence in the future to get on with the organization of the British Industries Fair, to be held next February. This will be the Fair's silver jubilee, for it was inaugurated in 1915 when, one might think, Great Britain had her hands quite full enough without instituting an elaborate scheme to promote the sale of British manufactures abroad.

Already the poster for 1940 is in the hands of the printers. The dates "1915-1940" appear on it but "Britannia" is missing. She is no longer the emblem of the Fair, the Key of Opportunity having been substituted. The Key of Opportunity, however, turns out to be Britannia's trident.

"Britannia" has done duty for 24 years in the Fair's advertising, but, as the designer of the poster explains, while she has served her country well in associating the Fair with Britain, the letters "B.I.F." are now universally recognized.

ILL WIND BLOWS SWELL FOR CAPE

CAPE TOWN June 3—A great increase in the number of cargo vessels going round the Cape instead of through the Suez Canal is expected by shipping firms here owing to the high canal insurance rates. Cargo ships, carrying cargoes liable to high charges, will be diverted to the Cape, and the port facilities here are expected to be taxed to their utmost, with about 30 ships calling a month for fuel.

One Man's Meat—

COGAN, Wales, June 3—The frogs of Cogan are a nuisance to residents, but universities and botanists are offering to buy as many as 2,000 at fourpence each for research work.

Well, Robert Taylor is married. Now we'll see whether the fair fans think he can act or not.

BUSIEST DAY FIRST AIDERS IS REPORTED

"This was one of the busiest days I have ever experienced in first aid work," declared Chris Atkin of the St. John's Ambulance Friday evening. "We handled well over 50 cases at the first aid depot at the C.N.R. station and it was double that figure at one or two other points in the city."

The greater number of cases at the C.N.R. station occurred when the crowd broke through police lines when the King and Queen arrived. A man, visiting the city from Mirror, fell and received a bad cut on the arm. Another case was a lady who collapsed. Other cases were minor.

One of the worst spots in the city was in front of the Macdonald hotel where thousands of loyal citizens massed for a glimpse of Their Majesties. More than 100 cases were handled here by the St. John's brigade, the greater number being people who collapsed from the excitement of the occasion and the press of the huge throng. Another bad point was at the Cenotaph. Only two cases were handled at Portage avenue, while several were handled on the South Side.

Dr. A. K. Groff was in charge of the St. John's Ambulance Brigade, while those in charge of different stations were E. C. Ammott, Albert Allbright and Mr. Rymer.

There were 20 uniformed men of the St. John's Ambulance Brigade as well as 300 qualified members of the St. John's Ambulance Association, wearing armbands. These qualified members included Boy Scouts and Girl Guides detailed as first aiders.

Lad, 9, Receives Permission to Keep Queen's Handkerchief

OTTAWA, June 3.—Nine-year-old Dickie Braden of Ottawa has received permission from the Queen to keep a chiffon handkerchief Her Majesty dropped while driving along the driveway during the royal visit here.

Dickie picked up the handkerchief after the car passed, and wrote to Lady Katherine Seymour asking the Queen's lady-in-waiting if Her Majesty wished it returned.

A letter was received from Lady Katherine saying that "by command of the Queen" she had been instructed to tell Dickie he could keep the handkerchief as a souvenir. The boy plans to have it framed and hung in his bedroom.

Lilacs Form Setting For Wedding

Deep and pastel toned lilacs, banking the altar of the Highlands United church made a fragrant setting for the marriage of Thelma Doris Paulson, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Paulson and William Val McAfee, only son of Mr. and Mrs. William McAfee which was solemnized on Friday evening.

Rev. J. W. Smith officiated at the ceremony and the wedding marches were played by Mr. Hubbard.

WHITE SHEER GOWN

Snowy white sheer over heavy white satin fashioned the lovely gown worn by the bride for her wedding. The very full skirt was gathered at the waistline and two rows of satin ribbon gave a wide girdle effect to her frock. Narrow white satin ribbon lined the square neckline sleeves of her frock were short and puffed and she wore long white gloves.

She wore a chapel veil gathered into a wreath of orange blossoms and carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses and forget-me-nots. Mr. Paulson gave his daughter in marriage.

FLOWER GIRL

Little Miss Donna Paulson, niece of the bride made a charming flower girl, frocked in pale pink. The skirt of her dress was made with three large frills and she wore a tiny poke bonnet in the same delicate shade of pink. She carried a bouquet of lilacs.

Mr. Emmet Spears was best man.

150 AT RECEPTION

Approximately 150 guests were invited to the reception which followed at the Westmount hall. To receive in the bridal party, Mrs. Paulson, mother of the bride chose a hostess gown in figured silk with rose and blue flowers on a sand background. She wore a turban hat in sand with rose colored veil and accessories in white.

Mrs. McAfee, mother of the bridegroom was becomingly frocked in midnight blue sheer. Her dress had a jacket and she wore a rose colored hat with wide brim and other accessories in rose.

Mr. and Mrs. McAfee are motoring to the coast for a three weeks' honeymoon and on their return will make their home in Edmonton. To travel the bride wore a smartly tailored suit in grey with royal blue topcoat and other accessories in the same shade.

Ensembles Of Women Add Charm To Scene As 175 Presented

BRILLIANCE and color attendant upon the functions of parliament in the Empire's heart, London, found a resounding echo of clarity and beauty in the legislature chamber of the provincial Legislative Buildings in Edmonton on Friday afternoon, when a British King and his lovely Queen sat upon throne chairs on the throne dais and received expressions of loyalty and fealty from a number of Alberta's citizens. History was made at the moment the King entered the colorful chamber, accompanied by his Queen and escorted by Premier William Aberhart, history that will re-echo through all the pages of the story of this spacious province, and in the hearts of all its peoples, who with awe will say in years to come, "I was in Edmonton when the King, King George VI and his Queen, Elizabeth, were our beloved guests."

MOOD OF GAIETY

Carnival mood of gaiety and heartful gladness that has enveloped this capital city of Alberta since first the news was flashed across the world that Their Majesties had determined on this trip into their western Dominion, found its high point of climax as the beloved sovereigns entered the city in the early afternoon to accept the cordial welcome Edmonton citizens had prepared in their honor. This mood of gaiety, heightened by long—too long days of waiting, and brightened into fuller, richer glow as visitors from hamlet and town, city and country, thronged Edmonton this week, subsided into a feeling of awe and heart-felt emotion as Their Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth entered to take their places at the opening of the presentation ceremonies in the flag draped chamber.

OFFICIAL WELCOME

Earlier in the afternoon at the station of the Canadian National Railway company, cheering crowds foregathered to catch a glimpse of Their Majesties. Present to extend an official welcome to them, and to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Canada's prime minister who is accompanying the Royal party, were His Honor Captain John Campbell Bowen, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, and Mrs. Bowen, Premier William Aberhart and Mrs. Aberhart, His Worship Mayor John W. Fry and Mrs. Fry, Hon. James A. MacKinnon, M.P. for West Edmonton and federal minister without portfolio, and Mrs. MacKinnon.

The Queen wore for the occasion of her visit to Edmonton a modish ensemble in finest white crepe, the frock of which was trimmed with silver, and the coat of which was trimmed with silver fox. Her hat was a smart model of white straw, trimmed with white ostrich feathers.

Mrs. William Aberhart chose for the occasion an afternoon ensemble of fine white silk crepe, the coat of which was slightly gathered at the waist and which had cartridge fluting at the shoulders. Her accessories were white, save for her large picture hat of hand-woven straw, trimmed in narrow velvet ribbon. Crown of her hat was open, with tiny black lacquered feathers for trim. A corsage of fragrant gardenias completed her outfit.

Mrs. John W. Fry was dressed in a larkspur blue two-piece ensemble, the hem-line coat of fine wool. Trim on coat was to match frock. Large navy blue sailor hat, blue accessories, nosegay of sweetheart rosebuds, blue shoes and white gloves completed her ensemble.

Royal Party Is Feted At Tea Party

Private chambers of His Honor Captain John Campbell Bowen was honored by the presence of Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth on Friday afternoon, when they kindly accepted the invitation of the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Bowen to have tea, immediately following the presentations in the legislative chamber.

For the occasion the spacious room was converted into a drawing room with the windows banked with colorful spring blossoms. Red Roses graced the tea table.

BOUDOIR FOR QUEEN

The adjoining office was fitted into a boudoir for the Queen, with a soft green rug and hangings, Victorian dressing table and chair in carved walnut. On the dressing table were pictures of Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose.

Mrs. Bowen was assisted in receiving members of the Royal party by her daughters, Mrs. Francis Neal and Mrs. Charles A. Freund, and by her cousin, Miss Hazel McIntyre.

Mrs. Neal chose an ensemble in pearl grey with cape and silver fox furs. Her large picture hat was in black with a crown of flowers. Her flowers were a corsage of roses.

ASTRID BLUE

Mrs. Freund was in astrid blue marquisette, the bodice of her dress featuring tiny tucks from the neckline to waist. She wore a wide brimmed hat in astrid blue with long black streamers.

Miss McIntyre wore a frock in lilac tones with wide brimmed leghorn hat.

Married Fifty Years Today

Best wishes of many friends in civic and social circles are this week-end being extended to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Baker, of 6274 Ada boulevard, who are marking their fiftieth wedding day. They were married in Toronto on June 3, 1889. Prominent in civic affairs, Mr. Baker is an ex-alderman, a member of the city council for six years, during which time he was also chairman of the civic finance committee. He is a former member of the Edmonton Exhibition Board, the Edmonton Industries committee, the Rotary Club, and has membership in Ivanhoe Lodge, A.F. and A.M. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have taken an active interest in the welfare and prosperity of this city during their residence here since 1910, and their many personal friends join in wishing them the very best on this happy occasion. The photograph was taken recently when Mr. and Mrs. Baker were holidaying in Vancouver.

Hello Sergeant!

LONDON, June 3—The voice of the British sergeant is recognizable after 28 years, 24 of them years of blindness Cap. E. A. Pauley discovered, when he met his ex-sergeant-major at an army reunion.

Happy Day of Royal Visit Is Climaxed by Formal Government Dinner

SWEEPING hrough the highways and byways of the city from earliest break of day on Friday until latest evening, the rising crescendo of excitement and joy which clamed the city for their own on the history-making occasion of Their Majesties' visit to Edmonton, found its climax in the formal dinner party given by the government of Alberta en fete to the Royal visitors.

Spacious dining salon of the Macdonald hotel was the setting for the affair, where dinner table decoration colors of red, white and blue carried out the theme of a national festival day.

CONTINUOUS LINE

In a continuous line along the outer edge of the circular head table red roses, blue iris and white carnations were embedded in deep fern. Three candles in royal blue were placed at intervals in the flowers, while in front of Their Majesties was a large embankment of spring blossoms and fern with sprays of valley lilies, favorite flower of Her Majesty.

Individual tables set for six and eight guests were centred with fragrant bouquets of crimson roses, snow white carnations and blue iris. Excitement in the flag-draped corridors, in the attractively-appointed banquet hall and in the halls outside was climaxed as Their Majesties entered the dining salon to the strains of the National Anthem.

QUEEN'S GOWN

Cameo-like beauty of the Queen found a suitable frame in the lovely costume she had chosen for the occasion. The frock of snowy white organza was trimmed with gold piattes and she wore on her dark hair, a sparkling diamond tiara. Her jewels were a diamond and pearl necklace.

Ladies-in-waiting to the Queen, Lady Nunburnholme and Lady Katharine Seymour, chose formal gowns of black net over satin, and dull pebbly crepe respectively.

Mrs. John Campbell Bowen, wife of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, was gowned in a court gown of green and silver satin, and wore a shoulder bouquet of orchids.

Mrs. William Aberhart, wife of the Premier of Alberta, chose a French model of embroidered net in dusky rose pink with inserts of honey-toned net. Gold ornaments caught the straps at the top of the bodice, and she wore a simple gold bracelet. Her flowers were an orchid at her shoulder, and one on her bag.

Mrs. John W. Fry, the mayor's wife, wore a gown of peach salmon lace over satin, with waistline corsage of rose-toned flowers. Her slippers were of silver and her jewelry a brilliant braselet.

Mrs. James A. MacKinnon, wife of Hon. James A. MacKinnon, was a stately figure in her gown of lustre white chiffon, the bodice of which was ornamented with brilliants and came to points below the waist. Skirt was of tiny accordion pleats falling gracefully to the floor. She wore pearls.

Among the guests present at the dinner, numbering approximately 300, were the following ladies: Mrs. R W. Dalgliesh, of Claresholm—Evening frock in black ninon; corsage of pink roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

Mrs. T. A. Rodger, Calgary: Rosehaze gown with corsage of pink roses, wide black hat, white gloves.

Mrs. W. E. Cain: Suez with navy blue ensemble. White accessories.

Feeders Day Is Held At Varsity

About 500 farmers of the Edmonton district and their wives are expected to attend the Annual Feeders Day lectures at the University of Alberta Saturday. Beginning at 10.30 a.m. it continues until 4.30 p.m. Sponsored by the department of animal husbandry, it gives farmers an opportunity of discussing livestock problems with University experts and hearing lectures on new trends and discoveries.

Backache—Kidney Pains

Poison causes pain. When you have pains in the back, lumbago or rheumatic pains you may be suspicious of the kidneys. They may be slow and sluggish in removing uric acid poisons from the blood.

Along with inactivity of the kidneys you usually find the liver torpid and the bowels irregular. You can clear up this whole condition by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. For fifty years this popular medicine has proven its outstanding efficiency as a regulator of these vital organs.

Long-Stemmed American Beauties

— By John Robert Powers —

"I'm almost glad we lost our money," was the somewhat surprising statement made to me by Cobina Wright, Sr. Before the crash the Wrights had homes in New York, Long Island, Paris and Newport. After their fortune dwindled Cobina's parents got a divorce and the mother and daughter found themselves thrown upon their own resources.

To prove that the once wealthy aren't always helpless, Cobina Wright's mother instituted a life of rigid economy and started out to make a living for her daughter and herself. Cobina Jr. had no debut and no mink or sable like the less unfortunate daughters of many friends. Mrs. Wright, once an opera singer turned her talents and connections to profit by entertaining in smart cafes and became the foremost organizer of society balls. In addition to that she sang on the radio from time to time.

When Cobina Jr. was fourteen I encouraged her to capitalize on her own charm and attractiveness by doing some commercial posing. While doing this Cobina studied singing and developed a good voice herself. She has appeared at many smart places in Palm Beach and New York and has been on several coast to coast radio programs. She also appeared in minor and supporting leads as an actress with a well-known summer stock company.

Last season in Palm Beach, Cobina was chosen by the Artists and Writers as the most beautiful girl there. This year she was selected by the Illustrators' Society as the "most attractive and talented girl of the 1939 season." In addition to these honors she was chosen among the twelve best dressed women in America by the Fashion Academy. Quite a number of honors to accumulate at the age of 17.

Cobina's first love is the theatre and her ultimate ambition is to become a good actress. She is interested in singing and she hopes that through her singing she will finally get the real opportunity to crash the dramatic stage in a big way. She told me that having a Park Avenue background had not been a great help to her in her singing. Many times the attitude of the people of the audience before listening to her has been: "Oh my, just another one of those society girl singers."

"Remarks like that burn me up," Cobina said. "I wouldn't mind so much if they would just listen first and then say that I'm awful.

"The same goes for the theatre too because an audience as a whole doesn't give a continental about family background and we get just as many knocks as anybody else. If you can't overcome your social connections you get tossed out on your ear just as fast as the next one."

Cobina is tall and streamlined, a natural American Beauty whose crowning glory is her hair. Lovely and blonde, she recommends that all girls should give themselves or get a thorough shampoo at least once a week and that their hair should be thoroughly brushed every day. In that way you can keep your hair as clean and fresh as your face."

Cobina poses mostly now for magazine covers and for endorsements for good products. Her fees for this work are among the highest in the business.

Delight Your Friends—Tell Clever Fortunes

Learn at Home, Shine at Parties

Cynthia's going to keep the crowd gasping with her fascinating fortunes. Let's listen as she cleverly practices on herself.

"The Three of Spades—that means a journey! And a happy surprise, perhaps a raise in salary, says the Four of Diamonds. The Eight of Clubs foretells a dark-haired suitor—the Seven of Hearts, success in love!"

Sure to make a hit at parties are "birthday fortunes." Cynthia learns John was born on May 12, 1914. She counts 1 for each of the letters in "May," adds the figures in the date, 1, 2, 1, 9, 1, 4. Total is 21—and from this Cynthia subtracts the number of letters in the name John. Answer, 17. John draws 17 cards, plus his name card (a King of Clubs because John's brown-eyed, brown-haired)—and the fortune begins!

Fortune thrills in the dominoes, too! Turn up the six-three—you're going to get a gift. The [illegible] A party's in the offing.

Entertain your friends, be popular at parties with the fascinating fortunes in our 32-page booklet. Tells how to read cards, tea leaves, dominoes, horoscopes. Gives "crystal-gazing" pointers, fortune games for parties, the intriguing "Mystic Circle" fortune.

Send 15c in coins for your copy of Fun With Fortune-Telling to The Edmonton Bulletin, Home Service, Edmonton, Alberta. Be sure to write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

DOROTHY DIX Says:

DEAR DOROTHY DIX—Girls are always asking why they don't interest men and have dates. Here's telling 'em: It is not because they are too clever or too dumb, but because they are in a position to make a man feel inferior. Most of the young fellows aren't doing anything to shout about, consequently they consider themselves out of the marrying class. Especially when they aren't making good money. I am free, white and 26, but I am also broke or badly bent, and haven't any immediate bright prospects for the future. So what? So I maintain a strictly neutral course, and that is what most of us young men are doing. It is the safest. We [illegible] step out with nice girls, only it must be under our own steam. And as we can't raise this, we stay on the sidings, wh[illegible] and maybe [illegible]

It is a pity that men have this feeling that they must always look down on women, because it makes them do so many foolish things, such as seeking the society of ignorant little nitwits instead of intelligent, educated girls, and particularly of making the tragic mistake of marrying inferior women who drag them down instead of women of their own class who help build them up.

How Shall We Safeguard Our Daughters And Sons?

Lassy, who is seventeen, came home at 11.30, saying [illegible] and stopped in at Tony's for innocuous drinks and [illegible]

WE, who love children and the care of children, don't let them go out into deep waters before they can swim.

To do that simply means to destroy them, the savage, relentless strange element seizes them, they are carried off their feet, swept away, lost.

All mothers understand this, and when they have the youngsters [illegible] the treacherous waters of the lake or at the shore their lives are one long struggle of warning and watching.

But what about those deeper waters that come creeping up around their young feet when they are fourteen, sixteen, eighteen? What about that other strange element called sex, that irresistible current that catches them before they are fairly out of high school and sweeps them away from solid ground, away from safety ropes, far out where the whirlpool waters are deep and dangerous? Many a good mother who watched them conscientiously when their brown young feet were fearlessly running along the shore, and their brown young arms were doing their first "crawl" and "overhand," doesn't seem to see that peril in time, and when she does see it the tide has carried her innocent little girl away from her forever.

"Oh, if they could only stay at the measles and circus and scratched knee stage!" "I knew how to manage them, then! They've escaped me now. My boy is twenty, my girl seventeen. They never quarrel, but they are two completely different persons. Laddie is developed and old for his years; Lassy very childish in many ways for hers. He goes with one set; she is beginning to go with another.

"What their father and I want to ask is: Are there any set rules for youngsters of these ages? How much freedom of pocket money and use of the car should Laddie have, and just how much evening amusement is safe for Lassy? She is still in high school; her brother is attending business college.

HOURS OF ANXIOUS WAITING

"Last week two things happened that made my husband and myself uneasy. One was that Laddie and a chum, after spending the early evening hours over their law books, quite suddenly departed in the car and were gone for three hours. I lay awake, of course, until my son returned, growing more and more anxious; he came in at half-past one reporting merely that he and his friend had gone to Tony's to have a beer, and there had met two other boys, and all four had gone on farther to another place to watch the dancing.

"I was so nervous, waiting for him, so apprehensive that there had been an accident or that he was in some trouble, that I feel I can't face that sort of a night often, and don't know what to do. If we refuse him the car he'll just use some other boy's car. And, of course, we want to keep it all affectionate and easy.

"The other upsetting thing was that in the first place he went he saw Lassy and a school crowd. The special boy she was with he doesn't like at all; he says he is a show-off and a snob. Lassy was at home at half-past-eleven, after a movie, and says they just stopped in at Tony's [illegible] the first [illegible] night. H[illegible] low?"

Thousands of mothers ask [illegible] of educators these questions every year; there are many answers and the consensus of opinion [illegible] itself down into several [illegible] ought to be firmly fixed [illegible] ought to have been impressed on Laddie and Lassy long before this. The children should have grown up knowing those rules were there, and telling their friends that they, Laddie and Lassy, would have to respect them.

ADVISES GUARDED FREEDOM

A girl of seventeen should be allowed to go to certain dances, those about which her mother knows. [illegible] homes of friends, at school [illegible] chaperoned at some [illegible] or hotel. Well-chaperoned because [illegible] happen to young girls [illegible] older person about. [illegible]

[illegible] regulations. When she is twelve [illegible] so many cases, of [illegible] influence. It isn't exerted or even defined until the crisis arises. [illegible] and the little girl goes her [illegible] and uninterrupted way. Nobody had stopped her up to this [illegible] and nobody is going to stop [illegible] Of course mother and dad have all the money—they really have all the power—but they don't know it, and they hate scenes, and hate to disappoint her, and [illegible] pleasantness it's worth it, to get away, to be laughing with the crowd [illegible] fifteen minutes, and not to think of home again until she creeps back [illegible] an early morning hour to shed her clothing and slip into bed, her lips still thick with scarlet paste, her breath not pleasant, her hair scented with tobacco smoke.

Cora Hind's New Book

By Nellie McClung

(Copyright Reserved)

IN PUTTING a picture of the Statue to a Ukrainian poet as the frontispiece of her new book, Dr. E. Cora Hind pays a graceful tribute to the Ukrainians in Canada, and one which will be appreciated by these patriotic people. The Ukrainians in Canada are greatly burdened in spirit by the happenings in Europe. Their lovely country lies in the path of the storm. Five million of their countrymen are living under Polish rule and their lives are made bitter by the zeal of their masters in trying to stamp out their language, their organizations, and their independent spirit. Recreation centres have been closed, churches have been burned, their leaders, both men and women, have been arrested, assaulted and imprisoned. Poland seems to have learned nothing from their long years of oppression, and still seem to believe people can be coerced into loyalty.

LOYAL TO CANADA

These conditions have been a matter of concern to the Canadian people, and appeals have been made to Poland, on behalf of their Ukrainian subjects, but now that England and Canada are assuming responsibility for Poland's safety, it would seem like a most fitting time for us to ask that the Ukrainians be treated fairly. Canada knows their worth, their eagerness for learning, their love for music, their loyalty to this land of their adoption. Five million people living on their own land, surely should have the right to assemble and to worship in their own way.

To return to the Poet, whose beautiful memorial at Kharkov Dr. Hind has brought to us in her book: Schevchenko was born March 9, 1814, and died March 10, 1861, at the early age of 47.

BURNING WORDS

The Ukrainian people in Canada (who are our third largest national group) love the name of this great man, whose burning words breathed forth a love of liberty, justice and freedom. The Ukraine, with its 36,000,000 people suffered bitter humiliation under the tyrannous rule of Czarist Russia, and when Schevchenko, in his poems, voiced their feeling he fell under the displeasure of the Czar and his emissaries. Ten years in a military prison was his sentence. He did not survive. He was allowed no visitors, no books, no writing material, and so passed another great man, whose only crime was love of liberty.

Each year the Ukrainian people in Canada celebrate his birth and death, and hold his words in reverent memory.

Dr. Hind gives two translations of his best known poem, and I have a third which was given to me by one of his loyal followers, Mr. Michael Bellighy, who edited a Ukrainian paper in Edmonton. It is so beautiful in its simplicity I will quote it in full:

"Dig my grave and raise my barrow
By the Dnieper's side
In Ukraine my own land
A land fair and wide
I will lie and watch the corn fields
Listening through the years
To the river's voices roaring
Roaring in my ears

Bury me, be done with me
Rise and break your chain
Water your new liberty
With blood for rain
Then in the mighty family
Of all men free
Sometimes maybe very softly
You will speak to me."

Dr. Hind's book, "My Travels and Findings", the second since her trip around the world, is dedicated to the memory of her aunt, Miss Alice Anna Hind, a dainty little lady who mothered Cora and her brothers after their parents had died.

CULTIVATED ACRES

On a farm in Grey County, Ont., Cora got her love for agriculture, as she followed her English grandfather around his well-cultivated acres. Everything on the farm was carried on with precision, and Cora learned there about rotation of crops, and the best method for feeding stock. People marvel at her uncanny knowledge of farm problems, her intuitive sense in estimating crop returns, and her deep love for the soil and those who abide with it, but she came by it honestly both through heredity and environment.

Her two books are mines of useful information, but they are more than that,—they are minute pictures of life in other lands, seen by a keen-eyed woman who sees clearly and speaks fearlessly. Cora was never known to trim her sails to the winds of public opinion.

The name of her aunt, Miss Anna Hind, brings back the story of Cora's childhood. She was too young to know that the coming into the home of the three orphan children caused their handsome young aunt to forego her marriage to a young man in the neighborhood. Years afterward, some busybody told this to Cora, much to Miss Anna's annoyance, who never felt that she had been a martyr on the altar of duty, for there were great compensations. No mother and daughter were ever more closely knit in affection than Miss Anna and her clever little niece. Their home in Winnipeg, where they came when Cora was sixteen years old, was a delightful one. Cora never knew the lack of motherly affection, and as years went on the comradeship between the two women held against all distractions. Perhaps it was due to her Aunt's influence that it has been possible for Cora to preserve, in her character the best of the old tradition, and absorb at the same time, all that is of value in the new.

She still likes to make her own bread, but she never takes a train if there is a plane going. She had the first fireless cooker I had seen, and she made it herself. I still have a silk dressing gown she made for me. Her taste in clothes has never been questioned. It is just as unerring as her judgment on Seed Grain. No wonder her books are eagerly read, for Cora has not only the gift of happy expression but she can interpret what she sees and relate it to everyday life, and she has seen so much.

"I Saw for Myself" and "My Travels and Findings" are treasures for the intelligent reader.

Their Majesties Dine With Subjects at Government Banquet

Stories Here and There From His Books, Lectures and Conversations

ELECTRIC SERVICE

I WAS talking the other day about "grim humor," and told the s of the man who was killed in the Ontario power house.

I afterwards remembered another example of grim humor tha recalled from the days when I used to go on lecture trips in the Un States.

I was to lecture in an Ohio city, and a local lawyer kindly met me at the train and drove me to my hotel. On the way he indicated points of interest.

STEPHEN LEACOCK

"That's our jail," he said, stopping the car for a minute beside a grim building that walled one side of the street, and he added, "I had a queer experience with a man in there a month or two back."

"What was that?" I asked.

"Well," he said, "this feller was in there under sentence of electrocution, and our firm got a letter from a law firm in Chicago which read:

"We understand that Mr. Joseph Smith is a client of yours, in which case please inform him that if he does not pay the account for $18.50 on which we have been suing him, we must proceed to more drastic measures."

"We wrote back in answer," continued the lawyer, "you are c in supposing that Mr. Joseph Smith is a client of ours. He is at pres in the jail here awaiting electr tion, but if you can think of an thing more drastic please proceed to it right away."

The lawyer having told his s proceeded, after the American f ion, to hang another piece on

"Yes, sir," he continued, " feller was up in that corner c and I went to see him,—when knew he'd no chance,—and a him if there was anything we do for him.

"Yes," says he, "there is. I d exactly like that electric sign I across the street every time I g the window."

The lawyer stopped speaking a began to start his car.

"And what was the sign?" I asked.

"It's still there," he said. "Y can read it."

He pointed, and I looked up a saw a sign that read: Something Electricity for Everybody.

FIREWORKS END GALA ROYALTY VISIT DAY HERE

Spectacular pyro technical display capped the Royal Visit day program Friday evening when $1,200 worth of fireworks boomed and crackled over old Diamond Park below McDougall hill to light the river valley for almost an hour. The huge saucer-like slope of the north river bank teamed with humanity as thousands of spectators viewed the spectacle.

Starting around 10 p.m., the display thrilled the crowd from start to finish as rockets zoomed skyward to burst in myriad colored streamers of fire.

Long beads of colored lights floated suspended from tiny parachutes high in the heavens and waterfalls of flame rolled over specially constructed frames on the ground. Fountains of lights and flares illuminated the side of the hill and the flats below.

Climaxing one of the most successful firework displays the city has ever witnessed, two huge pictures of Their Majesties were etched in fire with the words "Long May They Reign," joining the Royal couple. The striking likeness of the fire pictures drew round on round of applause from the admiring spectators.

Crowd witnessing the fireworks was one of the largest ever assembled on the slopes of the hill. Hordes leaving the scene flowed up the paved incline and down 100 street like a great river to br off into little creeks as Jasper a the lane in front of the Macdonald hotel was reached.

One spectator summed it up as being well worth five "bucks" to watch.

Sentence Upheld

REGINA, June 3—Conviction and sentence of 2½ years in penitentiary imposed upon William Mandryk, merchant of Cudworth, Sask., for his part in a series of relief frauds in Fish Creek municipality was upheld by the Saskatchewan court of appeal Friday.

CHURCHES CARRY THRONE THEME

As the visit of Their Majesties to Canada has awakened devout interest in the throne of Great Britain and the Empire, many churches will continue the regal theme in services this Sunday.

At Knox United church, Sunday night, Rev. Dr. G. A. Macdonald will preach on the theme, "King by Destiny." Suitable music will be heard in many city churches.

CHURCH PENSION PLAN IS APPLIED

CLEVELAND, June 3 — Recommendations for extension of a church pension plan to apply to all employes, from janitors to ministers, went before the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the U.S. today.

By extending its pension system the church hopes to avoid inclusion in the United States Social Security act. Impending proposals presented to congress would make the act applicable to churches.

The general council recommended a church-wide adoption of the employes' pension plan to cover a small percentage of lay employes — such as janitors and secretaries—who are not now included in benefits.

Another proposed change in retirement and pension rules would make it mandatory that a church employe retire on accepting a pension. Commissioners said this proposal would prevent retired ministers who draw pensions from continuing to preach.

METHODISTS NAME NEW PRESIDENT

At the Methodist conference, held in Perth, West Australia, Rev. W. G. Hyde was elected president, and in [illegible] that the [illegible] of the church was too much like a whisper. Methodists had to be more forceful before they can make the impact on the world expected from them."

Missioner A. C. Milnes of Port Hedland Inlet Field, which measured 500 by 275 miles, reported that his superintendent in Melbourne said that there were two seasons at Port Hedland—hot and very hot. There is a serious lack of candidates for the ministry, the conference overruling the examining board and sending four students out from college to man the circuits. The Queensland conference has started a campaign to raise £60,000 to establish a college within the new University of Brisbane.

CARDINAL ROSE TO GREAT HEIGHTS

The late Cardinal Hayes was in many ways a typical American and rose to the heights among the greatest of the land. His successor, Rev. Francis J. Spellman, Auxiliary Bishop to Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, comes to that very important see, said to be the richest in the world, amidst the joy and satisfaction of the clergy and laity. He was born in Whitman, Mass., 50 years ago. As a youth with brilliant talents he was chosen by his bishop to attend the American College in Rome, where he attracted such attention that he was invited later by Cardinal Gaspari to leave his first parish as a priest and return to Rome. His immediate superior in the Roman Curia was Cardinal Pacelli, who now as pope has named him among his early appointments of great importance. Cardinal O'Connell, who has been in a real sense a father to him closes a tribute by touching upon the qualities which were in the mind of Pius XII when chosen: "A prelate upon whom he can absolutely rely for the firmness of the faith, the courage of [illegible] and loyalty to the centre of Christian unity."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

"God the only Cause and Creator" is the subject of the lesson-sermon at all Christian Science churches on Sunday. The golden text is Psalms 93:1. One of the Scriptural citations is: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Genesis 1:1). One of the correlative passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, is: "There is but one primal cause. Therefore there can be no effect from any other cause, and there can be no reality in aught which does not proceed from this great and only cause." (p. 207).

According To Culbertson

"Dear Mr. Culbertson: Here is an unusual hand which occurred in a rubber bridge game the other evening. Perhaps your readers would be interested in hearing how an expert would handle the situation.

"The bidding:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 heart | Pass | Pass | 2 hearts |
| Pass | 3 diams. | Pass | 3 spades |
| Pass | 4 diams. | Pass | 6 clubs |
| Pass | 6 diams. | Double | 6 spades |
| Double | 7 clubs | Double | Pass |
| Pass | Pass | | |

"I sat South. My cue bid of two hearts over the weak opening of one heart forced my partner to keep the bidding open until a game was reached. My hand seemed to have slam possibilities if I could find support for either of my two suits and distributional possibilities in my partner's hand even slightly similar to my own. Obviously he could show me nothing more than playing tricks.

"The reasons for my jump switch from spades to six clubs were as follows: I could locate nothing of any value to my hand at that time by a bid of four no trump (diamonds being the lowest ranking suit bid at that time, I could not accurately place the diamond ace), and five no trump would have been inaccurate. A five club bid, under the apparent circumstances, would have terminated the bidding. The proper place for the contract, from a playing standpoint, is six clubs. However, my partner went to six diamonds, thinking that my club bid might possibly be another cue bid in an attempt to reach a seven diamond contract if I had diamond support and was cue bidding for that reason). The remainder of the bidding was an attempt at reaching the best suit fit. The diamond ace opened from West's hand automatically gave us the contract. Aside from the [illegible], I have mentioned, how would you have bid my hand under the circumstances of West's opening?—Mrs. G. S. G., St. Louis, Mo."

From the tone of my correspondent's note, it seems that she is not quite satisfied with her own bidding in this hand. If that is the case, she deserves immediate reassurance. As South, her bidding was flawless. Bid by bid, she followed the course that undoubtedly would be taken by every master.

I cannot say nearly as much for North's bidding. I grant that North was in somewhat of a spot over South's three spade bid and that, perhaps, his four diamond rebid was as good a way out as any. But there was no reason or excuse for interpreting the six club bid as anything but an honest suit-showing bid which offered to North a choice between spades and clubs. As South, my correspondent, points out, a five club bid over four diamonds would not truly have represented the strength of the South hand and would have run the grave risk of being passed out by North with many holdings that would make a small slam a laydown.

The result of the "pushed into" grand slam contract was, of course, highly satisfactory to North-South, but in this connection I might say that West, for his crime of opening the diamond ace, should have been at least lightly spattered with boiling oil.

MEAL PROBLEM ABLY HANDLED BY CITY CAFES

Two hundred thousand Albertans who thronged Edmonton Friday to see the King and Queen presented a gigantic problem for food purveyors and restaurants but all were satisfactorily served and without undue jamming, according to restaurant managers.

One large restaurant reported serving 2,000 meals during the day. The busiest Saturday trade ordinarily does not exceed 1,000 meals. [illegible] Hamburger stand [illegible] a rush business for people catching quick bites instead of full meals.

Crowds flowed steadily into eating places all day and, although there were rush periods, restaurants were well prepared and well staffed and at no time kept customers waiting unduly.

NINE INFANTS BORN ON DAY ROYAL VISIT

City Has Six Georges and Three Elizabeths On Friday

There are at least six new Georges and three Elizabeths in Edmonton since Friday's visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth to the city.

On that day three Edmonton hospitals reported that there were just that many boys and girls born here and it is expected that they will all be named for the visiting rulers.

At the Misericordia hospital a 6½-pound girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Leo Belhumeur of St. Albert and it was understood that the parents intended to name her Elizabeth.

At the Royal Alexandra hospital a girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Haig, 11819 101 street; a girl to Mr. and Mrs. B. Kaminski, 12948 69 street; a boy to Mr. and Mrs. William Laloski, 11924 80 street and a boy to Mr. and Mrs. John Mounik of Highvale, Alta.

At the University hospital four boys were born, to Mr. and Mrs. W. Tanner, 10424 84 avenue; Mr. and Mrs. E. Vanderwell of [illegible]hills; Mr. and Mrs. F. Ilay of Egremont, and Mrs. Hilda Roth of Leduc.

Pioneer farmer in the Leduc district, Rudolph Martin Hirsekorn, 80, died in an Edmonton hospital Friday after a brief illness. He is survived by his wife, three sons, John, Walter and Gustave; three daughters, Mrs. E. Schmidt, Gladys and Joanne, all of Leduc; four brothers, Frank at Clover Bar, Henry at New Westminster, and William and Albert at Leduc. Funeral services will be held at the family home, Leduc, on Tuesday at 1:30 o'clock, and church services at the Gnadenthal church at 2:30 o'clock, with Rev. Duesterhoft officiating.

Tiny Miss Presents Flowers to Queen

FLOWERS ARE PRESENTED TO HER MAJESTY

Fair-haired, blue-eyed Marie Stacey, nine-year-old Edmonton orphan girl from the Kiwanis Children's Home, who presented Queen Elizabeth with a beautiful bouquet of Johanna Hill roses on the steps of the legislative buildings Friday, did not feel a bit nervous about it all. She was accompanied by Miss Isobel McCuaig, matron of the home.

Frocked in a dainty blue silk interwoven with sprays of a delicate pink, which was repeated in the tiny bows in her straight blonde hair, Marie was a lovely sight as she stepped to the royal red carpet, her arms filled with Johanna Hill roses, curtsied gracefully to the Queen and handed her the flowers.

About to step from the presence of the monarchs, a word from the Queen held her a moment, as the bright blue eyes of Her Majesty softened and seemed for a moment to see far across the sea to her own two children waiting for her at home.

Smiling in a manner which put the child perfectly at ease, the Queen asked her name and how old she was. "How are you, my dear," Her Majesty asked. "I am fine, thank you," Marie answered as she gazed anraptured at her Queen, her young eyes memorizing every detail of that lovely face.

The Queen laid a kindly hand on Marie's shoulder and the child curtsied and backed from Their Majesties' presence.

Marie who has no father or mother will long remember this day.

The Inquiring Reporter

Collapse of an after-dinner speaker in New York, due, it was suggested, to the length of his speech, has led to a new crusade for shorter speeches. The Bulletin Inquiring Reporter gathered the following opinions on how to make speeches shorter, an achievement devoutly to be wished.

FRANK PEPPER, business leader: Every time a speaker begins to repeat himself, he should feel that he has inflicted an injury upon his audience. If speakers prepared more, their speeches would be briefer and better.

• • •

GERALD O'CONNOR, M.L.A.: It is harder to make a good brief speech than a long one. After-dinner speeches are an art, and only those capable of making them can prevent them from being a bore.

• • •

DON MATHEWS, clerk: Every time an after-dinner speaker feels he has a joke to tell, he should set his teeth firmly, bite his tongue, and then heroically refrain from telling it. In that way his speeches will be shorter and his presence a blessing at a banquet.

• • •

T. G. GRIFFIN, Canadian Legion: All speeches would be shorter if the speaker realized that he was an anti-climax to the dinner. If he has anything to say, let him write it. The only people tolerable are those who speak with the brevity, if not the eloquence, of Lincoln.

WESTLOCK MAN SEEKS PREVENT EVICTION STEP

D. M. Hartmann of Westlock, former lessee of the grist mill at that point owned by Mrs. Schroene, was in Edmonton Saturday attempting to gain an appointment with Premier William Aberhart in hope that the Attorney-General would take action to stop his eviction from the mill.

Thursday, Sheriff Daly of Westlock served eviction papers on Hartmann and when the miller refused to leave the premises, secured aid and forcibly ejected him. Hartmann, after refusing to move to quarters that had been prepared for him, left all his worldly belongings on the street in front of his former residence and brought his wife and five children to Edmonton with him Friday.

ROYAL WEATHER STILL PREVAILS: FORECAST WARM

Royal weather prevailed in Edmonton Friday as thousands upon thousands of out-of-town visitors flocked in to pay homage to their sovereigns. Bright sunshine prevailed for most of the day, Old Sol slipping under the clouds for only brief intervals.

At 5:30 p.m. the mercury reached its highest point when it touched the 64 above mark. Evening skies were clear and cloudless, allowing throngs to bid Their Majesties farewell under twinkling stars and a full moon.

Temperatures in the city sank to 35 above at 3:30 a.m. Saturday, only to rise to 60 above at 9 a.m.

LEGION MEET SUCCESSFUL: ENDS TODAY

Election Of Officers Finishes Four-Day Convention Here

The most successful convention in the history of the Alberta command of the Canadian Legion will close Saturday with the election of officers and the setting of the venue for the next convention.

More than 350 delegates and fraternal delegates from every command, branch and post in Alberta were in attendance during the four-day session.

Friday evening 150 members of the Legion and their wives attended a banquet and dance at the Memorial hall. The banquet proceedings were under the chairmanship of W. B. McLaren, M.M., president of the Edmonton branch.

Opening the ceremony the large gathering rose and drank the toast to The King, Grand Patron of the British Empire Service League. Other toasts were those to the British Empire Service League, proposed by Walter S. Woods, Ottawa, and responded to by J. R. Bowler, M.B.E., general secretary of the Canadian Legion, Dominion Command. The toast to the Defense Forces of Canada was proposed by Alex. ## What To Do

I am a young girl and wish you would tell me just how I can be popular. Boys never seem to be attracted to me even though I always make an effort to be pleasant and friendly when in a group. I would so much appreciate any suggestions from you. DISCOURAGED.

Answer—Maybe you try too hard to be friendly, although I think it is worth any girl's time and effort to try to be really popular. But if you are really a friendly person, gracious and interested in others, then you can gradually become popular with both girls and boys. Check up on yourself: Are you neat and attractive in appearance? Are you a good listener as well as a good conversationalist? Are you alert and are you a good loser? If you can truthfully answer "yes" to all of these questions, then you can't help but be popular. And, if you work to improve yourself along these lines, each year will find you with more poise, charm and self-confidence. It really isn't difficult to be the kind of a person you want to be, but it takes more than wishing—it takes time and effort.

It Is Happening Now

A Bulletin Short Story Complete On This Page Every Saturday

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

"NOW, mother, what do you think of that?"

When James Wake, mayor of Casterbridge, had quite made up his mind to do a thing he always asked his wife's advice, but he was one of those fortunate men whose wives always approve of everything.

As he spoke, he held up a large placard, and fixed it against the [illegible] tea-pot in front of Mrs. Wake.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CASTERBRIDGE
A. R. P.
(Air Raid Precautions)

There is going to be a BLACK-OUT in Casterbridge tomorrow (Tuesday) night, and a thousand bombing planes will be flying over and circling around the town from 10 P.M. to midnight.

Every man and woman is enjoined to stay indoors until the sirens give the signal for them to proceed to their appointed air raid shelters. There they will remain until the sirens blow the ALL CLEAR.

Tomorrow (Tuesday) morning from ten onwards, there will be an evacuation of all the children of school age in Casterbridge. Accompanied by their teachers, they will be sent by road or rail to their appointed destination. In some cases the children will return to their homes on the morrow, that is, Wednesday. When this is impossible, owing to distance or some other circumstance, they will return on Thursday.

I rely upon the patriotism of the people of Casterbridge to co-operate in every way possible with the A. R. P.

JAMES WAKE, Mayor.

A cosy family party, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Wake and their tall good-loking son, Hereford, who had just come home from college, were seated at a bountifully spread breakfast table. On a side table on a long hot steel plate, stood three silver entree dishes; the first containing eggs and bacon, the second broiled kidneys, and the third mushrooms on toast. There was a ham on the sideboard, too.

The Mayor of Casterbridge believed in taking care of the inner man. And of the outer man, too. Thus there was a big, cheerful fire in the wasteful iron-basket grate.

As she looked around her, Mrs. Wake's sensitive mouth quivered. It had seemed inconceivable that war would ever come near her cherished home, yet she felt now that war was very near. Passionately did she love her only child, and the somewhat arrogant young man now sitting opposite to her, was silently devoted to his reserved, delicate mother.

The father, from whom Hereford had inherited his arrogant demeanor, was both proud and a little afraid of his college-bred son. As for Hereford, he kept his views about his father to himself.

* * *

Haunted by One Fearful Memory

After Mrs. Wake had read the Proclamation, her husband saw, to his puzzled surprise, a shadow fall on her face.

She glanced across the table. "What do you think, boy?" and she slightly stressed the you. She had always called her only child "Boy," and when he had been a real boy, Hereford had silently resented her doing so, but now that he considered himself a man he rather liked to be called that.

"I think it's tophole, mother! All the same I would suggest that just one line be added," he said frankly.

Mr. Wake exclaimed, "What sort of line? I have toiled and toiled over this Proclamation, and I think it couldn't be bettered."

"It's very good, father, but all the same I would insert, after Thursday, the line, 'Mothers will have been informed of their children's destination'."

Mrs. Wake exclaimed, "You're right, Boy! That's what's wrong with it."

"I don't agree," snapped out her husband. "I did consider the question. But war is war. And the people of Casterbridge have got to get used to the idea. They don't think of it half enough."

He waited a moment, and then added, "When war comes we shall all have to make sacrifices."

Involuntarily Mrs. Wake again looked across at the son who had been all her life since the day of mingled pain and joy on which he had been born, nineteen years ago.

Ever since last September she had been haunted by one fearful memory. This was that every lad from Casterbridge who had gone out to France in the early weeks of the last war, had ended by being killed.

During the last few months, her husband had sometimes felt puzzled, and even rather worried, by the sad expression which now and again settled on her face. Sometimes, when sleeping by his side she would give a long piteous sigh, and once she had waked up crying.

Yet the truth as to the dread which now filled her heart had never crossed the mind of the husband who truly loved her. The only reason he could think of for the change in the happy placid woman she had always been, was that, as she was not strong, her duties as Mayoress of Casterbridge, and the arduous work she was now doing for the A. R. P. was proving just a little too much for her.

As his wife and son sat silent, Mr. Wake went on. "Why should a mother want to know where a child has been sent for that child's good? Every schoolteacher in the town has been given most careful instructions, and all of them know where they are to go, and what they are to do after they get there."

Mrs. Wake made no sign that she had heard what had just been said. She was staring at Hereford as if hypnotized by him, said her husband crossly to himself. He couldn't remember a time when she had taken their son's view against him, as she had just done.

Getting up he went and cut himself a thin slice of the excellent sugar-cured ham, and then he helped himself to two broiled kidneys.

"I am certainly not going to allow any mother in Casterbridge to know where her child is tomorrow!" he exclaimed as he sat down again. "I should regard it as useless information, and as cringing on my part as Mayor to a foolish sentimentality. "Besides," he added somewhat lamely "there isn't time to do it! There are a hundred and fifty thousand of these placards printed, and they must of course all be distributed today."

Saw Father was Much Put Out

Hereford saw that his father was by now very much put out indeed, and he knew that this fact would disturb his mother. So in a conciliatory tone he said:

"It was clever of you, dad, to persuade all those house-proud people to allow the children of Casterbridge to be billeted on them, even for one night, for after all what is going to happen tomorrow is only a sort of dress-rehearsal of the real thing [illegible]."

"Your father has been working at this affair night and day for the past fortnight," chimed in Mrs. Wake. "It's just wonderful what he's done."

Her husband's face cleared and he exclaimed, "And it's been the worst job I ever took on! Most of those uppish country house folk profess themselves ready to do their bit when the bombs begin to fall, but they don't see why they should be asked to do anything now.

"As for Viscount Farrigold, he said he thought it all a farce. But the old chap couldn't frighten me. I took the liberty of reminding him over the telephone that he was what is called a profiteer. Before he had time to cut off, I said that the last war had made him a viscount, and that maybe the next war will make him an earl.

"My really big trouble was with the new owner of Crown Lacy. The chap declared that he doesn't intend to have children quartered on him even when war does come. He also had the impudence to inform me that he's a child hater. But he didn't know the kind of man he was up against, son. I got on to the Air Ministry instanter, and they brought my fine gentleman to heel.

"It was my bad luck that he was a famous airman in the last war, what they call an Ace, and that made them turn weak. Considering the size of that huge house, I would have forced him to take in five hundred babies. But they compromised with him on fifty kids of school age."

"What's his name, father?"

"Stephen Langton and I have taken the trouble to find out all about him. He didn't have a penny to bless himself with until three months ago. Taught flying for a living. Then an old war pal left him a big fortune, and he bought Crown Lacy dirt cheap. He is a decent landlord, but he doesn't do a hand's turn for anybody but his tenants. Just now he is spending a mint of money making a big flying field."

"That's doing something, dear," said Mrs. Wake gently.

"I am thinking of taking up flying," said Hereford meditatively. "If war does come, I had rather have a short life and a merry one, instead of having my lungs destroyed with mustard gas as a foot slogger."

While he was making that cheerful remark, he was engaged in taking a second helping of the thick dark Oxford marmalade of which a pot was always put in front of him at breakfast when he was at home. His father preferred the thin, light, yellow kind.

And now all at once he saw with surprise that his mother had got up, and was slipping toward the door. He would have been genuinely surprised, and maybe a little ashamed of himself, could he have seen her face, and the tears rolling down that dear face.

Hereford Wake was far more sensitive and alive to what went on about him than was his father, but he too, had that fortunate lack of imagination which is the Englishman's greatest asset in time of trouble.

Air Warden Anne Gaskell Was Greatly Respected

Late on the afternoon of the same day two women were standing face to face in the living-room of the ground floor of an ill-built house in a mean little street in Casterbridge.

The one, Anne Gaskell, was a mild, homely-looking middle-aged spinster lady, the other was a splendidly handsome young working-woman, Mrs. Barlock by name. She was a widow with one child, and regarded by her neighbors as proud and disagreeable for she kept herself to herself and made a far less good living than did the munition workers by doing fine sewing.

Miss Gaskell had been made Air Warden in this poor and somewhat turbulent part of the town. She was a minister's daughter, and had always done charitable work among the factory hands of Casterbridge so they all knew and respected her.

"I never thought I'd live to say 'No' to you, Miss Gaskell. It seems a poor way to reward the kindness of the only person in Casterbridge who ever did me a good turn. But not even to please you can I let my child be taken from me and sent God knows where.

"I don't forget last September, whatever other folk may do. It was lucky for me that I was living—starving rather—in the country. A friend of mine allowed her little girl to be evacuated, as they call it, and for five weeks the child couldn't be traced. That woman is my age, but those five weeks turned all her hair gray."

"But this is very different from September, Mrs. Barlock. It looked like real war then, and it was a bolt from the blue. Nobody was ready, but everything is different now."

Miss Gaskell, as she spoke, was allowing her eyes to wander around the room. Miss Barlock had the ground floor of a Jerry-built house that lacked almost all civilized conveniences yet in that room of which the walls showed patches of damp there were signs of rudimentary culture. The few pieces of furniture were of Victorian mahogany bought at bargain prices and over the fireplace hung a faded engraving of the Sistine Madonna in a tarnished gilt frame.

She now looked with anxious pleading eyes at the still beautiful young widow, for she felt deeply troubled. It was her absolute duty as Air Warden to see that every child in her area left Casterbridge tomorrow.

"But surely you feel that your Rosie should not be exposed to even a sham air raid, Mrs. Barlock? She would be terrified by the dreadful long drawnout shrieks of the sirens. Also as you know, there are going to be a thousand bombers flying above the town. In fact, our Mayor tends what is to happen tomorrow night is to be as near what real war will be as possible."

Mrs. Barlock Thought The Mayor was a Fool

Mrs. Barlock answered defiantly. "To my mind the Mayor of Casterbridge is a fool Miss Gaskell. I shall not feel frightened, and my Rosie is a brave girl, but this sham raid will terrify a lot of nervous folks and I can't believe it's necessary. I have been sorry—indeed I have—that they've been distributing the new gas masks for babies. It has upset a lot of young mothers."

Miss Gaskell felt irritated. "Why the young mothers of Casterbridge have been calling out for gas masks for their babies ever since last September! As for the old women, they are asking for gas masks for their cats."

Milly Barlock laughed. "Ay, I know that. One old soul I know told me that her cat was worth a dozen babies any day."

"To go back to your little girl, I have heard that when they have had Blackouts in the big towns, some of the children actually threw fits they were so terrified."

A look of indecision, even of fear, flashed across the younger woman's face. "I'd have thought that what happened last September would have taught the A.R.P. people that sensible mothers won't allow their children to be taken away if they are not told where they are going."

"Now I have thought of something to say to you Mrs. Barlock. I, of course, know where your little Rosie is being taken. Suppose I tell you the name of the place, can I count on your not ever letting anyone know that an exception was made in your case?"

The speaker put her thin blue-veined hand on the other's rounded shoulder. "You say you are grateful for the little I have been able to do in getting you work since you came to Casterbridge? I now ask you earnestly, my dear, to allow your child to be evacuated tomorrow morning. She will have a very happy time where she is going to be. Believe me she will," and she put her arms around Milly Barlock and kissed her. Tears came into the other's eyes.

"Very well Miss Gaskell, I will let Rosie go away tomorrow if you will give me the name of the place where she is going to be taken."

How surprised Miss Gaskell would have felt had anyone told her that what had made just the difference had been the two little word, "my dear," and the timid kiss she had imprinted on Mrs. Barlock's rounded cheek.

She exclaimed, "That's right! You've taken a great load off my mind. The place where Rosie is going tomorrow is one of the most beautiful houses in England. Surely you have heard of Crown Lacy?" Mrs. Barlock shook her head.

"It's only ten miles from Casterbridge, and one of the show places not only of the county but of the country. The people whose family had it for near five hundred years never minded strangers going over it at stated time, but there is a new owner now and he won't let anyone in. However, he's been made to take fifty children, and I took the trouble to see that they were all nice clean children, like your dear little girl."

People Didn't Believe There Would be War

And now it was Tuesday evening, twenty minutes to ten by the luminous clock of the grand new Town Hall which had been opened the week of the Coronation, during James Wake's first term as Mayor of Casterbridge.

Who then had thought of war and of war's alarms? The great bulk of the people of England had believed that there never would be another war.

But now a deathly silence brooded over the town, and like almost every other human soul in Casterbridge, Milly Barlock was sitting in the dark, waiting for the long drawn-out wailing screams of the sirens.

She had made up her mind to stay where she was, disregarding the order to take her position in her appointed Air Shelter. It was deep underground, and she knew it would be terribly full of that poor, terrified humanity for which, in her heart, she felt a fierce contempt.

She had put out her light ten minutes ago. There was only gas for cooking in that house, and she did the fine needlework by which she earned her living, by the dim light of a kerosene lamp.

She felt at peace, believing her child to be not only in safety, but also in what meant a good deal to her, that is amid beautiful surroundings.

Her mind went back to the scenes which had taken place that morning when all the children of Casterbridge had been evacuated, leaving the town by rail and motor and even horse-drawn vehicles. By special wish of the Mayor an effort had been made to gather them all together in the huge old market place, and Mr. and Mrs. Wake had stood there for two long hours bidding each group God-speed.

Milly Barlock, who had an eye for a man, had noticed Hereford Wake standing close to where she had placed herself. It was to please his mother that he had unwillingly accompanied his parents, and when the orderly procession of which Rosie formed a part had been moving away, Mrs. Barlock had heard his whispered,

"How exciting it would be if the Pied Piper of Hamelin suddenly appeared! But I don't suppose Hitler would care to spare him, though he was part of the dear, romantic old Germany Hitler has done his best to destroy."

Unearthly Wail Warns of Raid

On the still air came the first long wailing scream of the sirens. There was a breathless interval, then came two more of those unearthly wails.

Milly Barlock stood up. She walked swiftly across to her window for unlike almost anyone in that street she had not drawn the blind.

She began to hear the rush of tramping feet, and before her eyes emerged in the moonlit darkness, shadowy figures making their way towards their special shelter which had been dug under the vaults of an ancient church. They moved along swiftly in an uncanny silence.

Suddenly from high up above the town came the deep whirring of the huge bombers. A thousand of them? They sounded like ten thousand. Instinctively some of the people began running.

There came an awful sound, a boom which drowned the noise of the planes. For a moment or two every shadowy figure stopped. Then began a more eager tramp of feet. Indeed there seemed a new urgency in the clip, clip, clop, caused by the heavy boots and shoes of the factory-hands of Casterbridge.

Again there came that ominous ear-shattering boom which seemed to shake the house and which, while it lasted, made even Milly Barlock's heart beat with fear. Then all at once the tramping outside ended, and it was an eerie feeling, that of being the only woman in Casterbridge who had not obeyed the order to take shelter.

Milly Barlock went into her back room. She lay down on her bed fully dressed, and tried to rest. She was very, very tired and knew that on the morrow a wedding order had to be completed. But she was far too excited, and her heart was far too full of her child, for her to rest. This was the first night since Rosie's birth that she had ever been parted from her.

The flaxen-haired, fragile-looking little girl was curiously unlike her mother and save in coloring, unlike also the stalwart, fiercely masculine looking man, who had been her father.

Rosie's father?

Rosie's mother turned on her pillow, and angrily she tried to stifle the burst of sobs his image had called forth. Never could she forget him, try as she would, and indeed she did try.

She was no widow, as all those about her believed; and as far as she knew that man who had subdued and captured her proud heart, and then had behaved so very ill by her, was alive. But where she neither knew, nor, she would sometimes assure herself, cared. Yet now and again, lying in the darkness, and she was lying now in the darkness, she felt a terrible longing for him.

Turning round she thrust the man who'd brought her shame and misery on the one hand, and the one thing in the world that mattered to her, that was Rosie, from her mind. Reluctantly, she told herself that Miss Gaskell had been right. It was a good thing that the child had been spared the events of this awesome night.

Awakened by Wild Banging

And with the thought of Rosie she became calm, and fell into a heavy sleep. That sleep must have gone on for hours, for as she was suddenly awakened by a frantic banging on her front door, she saw the dawn was breaking over the now still and sleeping town.

Leaping from her bed she rushed into the other room and opened wide the front door, to see before her the one woman with whom she had a neighborly relation. This Mrs. Jenkins was also a lonely and, as they say in that part of England, a manless woman. She, too, had a little girl, but a child much younger than Rosie Barlock.

Her pallid face now looked distraught. "I've an awful piece of news for you Mrs. Barlock!" and she pushed her way into the room. "It wasn't a sham raid last night, it was the enemy! Hark!"

And sure enough there came the droning of three planes right up in the sky. "And they say those devils could see nothing of the munition works because of the Blackout. So they flew away, and now they're busy dropping their loads of death out on the countryside. So you see our little ones would have been far safer here with us."

The woman had sunk down onto a chair. She began laughing and crying, working herself up into a fit of mad hysterics.

Though deadly fear was now clutching at Milly Barlock's heart, she said firmly, "I can't believe what you say is true, Mrs Jenkins. But just stay quietly here, and I'll go and find out," and as she spoke she was hurrying on her hat, and her coat.

Though her reason, and she was an intelligent and reasonable woman, told her that this poor soul had gotten hold of some wild and crazy tale, she couldn't take any chance where her child was in question. It had not taken her three seconds to make up her mind to walk the ten miles to Crown Lacy and find out if Rosie was safe.

* * *

Refuge in Sluggery

At eight o'clock the next morning—a beautiful spring-like morning—the owner of Crown Lacy had already taken refuge in what he called to himself his sluggery.

It was a delightful room, with amusing sporting prints and old caricatures on the walls. But there the late owner whose family had held the estate for over five hundred years had spent many tragic hours since each of his three sons had been killed at the Battle of the Somme in the Great War.

Stephen Langton knew nothing of [illegible], and this was by far his favorite room in the vast house. And, he had left it exactly as he had found it—with one exception. Over the mantle-piece beneath which now roared a cheerful fire, hung a charming slightly colored sketch of a woman's head and shoulders. It was a portrait of Langton's mother in early youth when her fair, indeed golden, hair, had been dressed in what was then called the Alexandra curl.

That picture gave a touch of Victorian primness and refinement to the robust looking man's room. But Langton had never known his mother looking like that, for she had married when over forty.

He listened. There came from the great hall where his fifty unbidden little guests were having a hasty breakfast the sound of chirping and subdued laughter. His grim face softened. He even smiled as he told himself that it sounded like the twittering of birds.

He knew nothing of children for he had been an only child, spoiled by a nervous doting mother who had been afraid that if he were allowed to be with his own kind he might "catch something." The sounds that he was now hearing reminded him of how lonely his childhood had been.

Ungraciously, he had bargained that he shouldn't have to provide anything in his splendid palatial country house but just housing space. But as is often true of that kind of dour Englishman, his bark was worse than his bite, and he had told the grand housekeeper he had taken over with Crown Lacy, and who was the only woman of whom he had ever been consciously secretly afraid, that ample meals were to be provided for his youthful invaders.

Seated at his writing table, and listening to the cheerful stir outside the room, he looked up at the picture of his mother, and it seemed to him as if her blue eyes were looking at him reproachfully. He suddenly became deeply ashamed at the thought that he had insisted that those fifty little girls should all have cleared out of his house by nine o'clock today.

There stretched before Stephen Langton a long, dull, yes, and miserable day. All night long he had lain awake listening to the now distant, now near sound of the bombing planes. He had felt filled with mingled envy and despair. How he cursed the great heart specialist who had forbidden him to fly again. He dared not disregard that warning, for he was in the Army Reserve, and knew that when war broke out he was to have an important land job in the Air Ministry.

There came a timid knock—such a gentle, little tap he hardly heard it—on the door. One of those tiresome school teachers no doubt coming in to ask some foolish question!

He called out brusquely, "Come in!"

The door opened slowly, slowly, and a little girl walked in. She turned and shut the door. He sensed she had been told to do that, always.

"Please sir, teacher says I am to say thank you very much for your generous hospitality to me and to my schoolmates." She had stumbled a bit over the word "generous."

Heard Woman's Defiant Voice

Stephen Langton got up. He took two steps towards her, and stared down into her guileless, delicately drawn little face. In a voice which shook and sounded very unlike his usual rough tones, he muttered, "You go and warm yourself by that big fire, my dear." And then when she had obeyed him, "Don't look into the fire, turn round and look at me."

Already he had gone across to the big window, and put his back to it, staring at the child as he did so. She was smiling tremulously now, for she was fearless, and her little mind was interested and even amused at this curious room, and at the big man who had spoken so kindly.

All at once, Langton heard a loud, defiant woman's voice exclaim on the other side of the door. "I don't care! Of course I'm going in there! I've got to make sure that you're telling the truth, and that it's my Rosie who is in that room. I am not a bit afraid of the gentleman. Why should I be?"

The door burst open. Milly Barlock walked in, and for a few moments all she saw was her child [illegible] happy, at ease [illegible] gave a cry. "Oh, my precious sweetheart!" She rushed forward and kneeling down gathered the child to her breast.

It was a piteous, protective, jealous gesture. Maybe for the first time there came over her what [illegible] know. That is that her child can be entirely happy without her. Sure enough Rosie wriggled, as her mother's hungry arms closed about her.

"Milly——"

Milly Barlock leapt to her feet and turning around she faced the man who had called out her name. Half blinded by the light from the window behind him, she could not see his face.

Instead of answering her, he came forward and walking around her smiled at Rosie, "You had better go out into the hall my dear. Your mother and I will be with you soon." and took her hand. It lay confidingly in his. Going across to the door he opened it, and after she had gone through, he locked it. Then he came back and faced Milly.

"What is it you want?" she asked defiantly. As only answer he took her in his arms, "I want you. I've always wanted you. And at least I know now why you left me. Why didn't you tell me, sweet? I would have married you. Of course I would!"

He pressed back her head and kissed her thirstily. But he felt [illegible] the words. "Rosie is not your child."

"Not my child?" he faced her—then drew her to the middle of the room, and still holding her to him, he exclaimed again, "not my child? Look up my dear, and see the picture of my mother."

He answered at once, "That won't be true long. We'll be married by special license tomorrow morning, and then she'll be my child in law, as well as yours. Come Milly, don't be mean!"

And then as she fell into his arms, he muttered, "I wish I could believe that you had ached for me as often as I have ached for you."

DATE WITH DANGER

CAST OF CHARACTERS
MARY FRANKLIN, society editor.
DUKE MARTIN, suave night club gangster.
JIM SHIRLEY, playboy.

• • •

CHAPTER XX

THAT night Clem [illegible] was standing at the bar of the Dove with Jack Burden when Duke Martin walked in. He saw that Jack, half-drunk, was arguing with Clem.

Instead of speaking to them, the Duke silently pulled out a chair at a table in a far corner, quietly told a waiter to bring him a drink, then settled down to watch the pair at the bar, a dark look on his saturnine face.

Clem was drinking a highball. Her black hair was tumbling in careless curls about a defiant face and the strap of a scarlet evening gown had already slipped off one shoulder.

Her voice was high-pitched and reckless as she replied to Jack's pleading tones.

His face was flushed, his hair rumpled, and his dinner coat wrinkled. Half-drunk, he was making a desperate effort to hold her attention. Occasionally curious eyes strayed in their direction, but the crowd which frequented the tap room of the Dove was accustomed to scenes of this sort. As a rule it tolerated them with bored indifference and objected only when the principles grew noisy.

• • •

Jack steadied himself at the bar as he ordered another drink. His handsome face was drawn and in his blood-shot eyes was a harassed, desperate look.

"You're a silly little fool heading straight for the devil," he said. Then reaching for the glass the bartender handed him, he added, "And I'm going with you."

"Don't talk rot," she said sulkily. "I don't want you policing me. You don't own me." Her voice grew hysterical. "I don't see what I ever saw in you—such a prig!"

"A prig because I object to your going with Martin when you know he's a crook. A prig because I don't like the pretty drinks he concocts for little girls." His voice broke. "My God, Clem. Can't you see it's only because I love you that I'm talking this way?"

"Sorry to interrupt," he drawled, "but I thought we had a date tonight, Clem."

There was a flicker of amusement in the Duke's eyes. "She wants to go."

Jack's right fist clutched convulsively, then trembled. "Perhaps you would like my money as well." He reached in his pocket. "I'll buy her back. How much is she worth?" He flung a roll of bills on the bar.

Clem stepped between the two men, her eyes were cold and hostile. "I never want to see you again, Jack Burden," she cried. "You're—you're unspeakable."

Martin caught her by the arm, his lowering face red and dark. "Come on, Clem." But before he could turn, Jack had swung again and this time he landed a neat one on Martin's chin. The owner of the Dove [illegible] "Don't be such a sap," he warned, shoving Jack into a chair. "Clear out and come back when you're sober."

• • •

The little group at the bar had everybody's attention. The head waiter rushed excitedly forward, a couple sitting near Martin and Jack moved to a far table and Nick came hurrying through the [illegible].

"You louse," he cried, grabbing Jack by his shoulder. "So you thought you could strong arm the Duke."

Feigning to reach for the drink, Jack swung at Nick's head instead, sending him spinning like a billiard ball among the tables. Before the crowd could grasp exactly what had happened, or before Nick could recover, Jack had drained the glass of whisky, hurled it at the head of an advancing and menacing waiter and bolted for the door.

Still running, he bumped hard into Mary Franklin, just as she was stepping into the main entrance.

When he didn't stop to apologize she stared after him. He stood on the curb in front of his automobile, swaying unsteadily as he tried to unlock the car door.

Mary rushed toward him as he fumbled [illegible]

"Jack," she cried, attempting to grab the car door, "What is the trouble?" He banged the car door shut. Mary was thrown backward on the pavement. His only reply was a screeching of the tires as he swung the car out into the middle of the street and careened wildly off.

• • •

The taxi man nodded. Jack's car was already turning up Third Avenue.

But the driver didn't answer. A policeman had thrust a grim face into the front of the taxi. "Where's the fire? Let's see your license."

"You can't stop this cab," Mary spoke sharply. "I'm on the Gazette." She reached in her bag. "Here is my police card." She tapped the driver on the shoulder excitedly. "Go on, every minute counts."

"Just a minute, sister, just a minute." The officer held up a warning hand. "I ain't got no quarrel with you, but I will have if you keep this up. Show your police card to the commissioner, not me. This bozo was breaking the traffic laws and he's going to get a ticket or [illegible]"

"Here, take this." Despairingly Mary flung a five dollar bill at the driver and jumped out of the car. "That'll cover your fine," she called and started running up Third Avenue looking frantically for another cab.

NEW YORK, June 2.—While victorious Lou Nova and his badly damaged victim, Maxie Baer, licked their wounds from Thursday night's savage engagement at Yankee Stadium, plans went forward Friday for another bruising encounter at high noon today, when champion Joe Louis and Tony Galento meet to sign the papers for their title bout June 28.

Drop Last Game 35-33 In Total Point Series

By JACK KELLY

Edmonton Bulletin Sports Editor

THE Underwood trophy, emblematic of the international championship in women's basketball, remains securely anchored on the Grads' trophy shelf today, but Coach Harry Wilson and his Queen Anne Aces can return to Chicago with the satisfaction of having beaten the world champs 35-33 in the final game of a three-game total-point series. The Grads won the series by a margin of 22 points.

Last night's final produced the finest basketball of the spring series before a fine crowd that must have numbered around 4,000. Chicago girls earned their victory all the way. There was nothing lucky about it. They were just better than the Grads—for one night.

It was the fine field shooting of Raymond, Goldman and Killgen that brought the Queen Anne their victory, while the checking of the rest of the club kept the brakes tightly set on the Grad machine. Raymond contributed 10 points with five field baskets out of seven tries. Goldman banged in four field baskets in eight shots and Killgen got five out of 16.

EDMONTON ALL-STARS BEAT CLANDONALD ELEVEN

Bob Graham Sets Pace For 3-1 Win

LIVING up to all advance notices that they would have a strong team, Clandonald football stars battled gamely for three-quarters of the game before finally beaten out by Edmonton All-stars at Clarke Stadium Friday evening. The visiting eleven held the Edmonton boys to a 1-0 margin for better than half the game, dropped behind 2-0 and then scored their only goal just before Edmonton tallied its last for a 3-1 win.

Bobby Graham led the All-stars. The starry inside right scored two of his team's three goals while Jimmy Anderson, inside left, tallied the third goal. Anderson was thought to have scored an earlier goal, but it was disallowed by Referee Hunter, who stated the ball went over the bar.

Edmonton started the game with several reserves in action. It was while these reserves were on that Clandonald held the Edmonton lads in check. Bobby Graham sent in the first goal at about the 30-minute mark in the first half. His shot was a sizzling drive which cleanly beat Goalie E. Waugh.

Shortly after the breather, Graham whipped his second shot past the Clandonald goalie. His second effort was productive after his clean shot completely baffled Waugh.

J. Cusack, one of the three Cusack brothers on the team, tallied his team's only goal. It came shortly after Graham's second-half goal and placed the teams on close terms. The All-stars enjoyed a small lead of one goal.

Jimmy Anderson drifted the third goal past Waugh. Anderson's shot eluded the Clandonald goalie after that custodian had fallen full length to save the drive.

Clandonald played a good game throughout. The Convey brothers, and there are four of them, along with the Cusack boys, of whom there are three, played a spirited game all the way and the fairly large crowd spent two hours of good sport.

THE TWICE-BUILT HOUSE: Still standing atop Fischer Hill in Brookline, Mass., is the huge stone mansion moved there from Marquette, Mich., in 1903, by John Longyear, iron ore and timber millionaire. A railroad was built along Lake Superior in front of Longyear's $500,000 Marquette mansion. His fight to stop the trains failed, so he determined to move. Rather than abandon his house, he decided to move it stone by stone. Seventy-four freight cars—two complete trains—were required to move it to its new site at Brookline. He lived in the rebuilt mansion nearly 20 years, until his death in 1922.

"FAREWELL to SPORT" by PAUL GALLICO

Time Blots Out Record

CONCLUSION

OUR equipment for all sports has been improving steadily, and will continue to improve. I doubt whether the golf-players of today on the whole are better men or better golfers than those of 30 years ago, though of course they play and practice more, because there is more incentive to win today than there was then. But there is only one proper way to hit a golf ball, and it is the same now as it was when the first Scot smote his feather ball with a crooked stick, over the highland hills and the seaside sand dunes, except that we know more about the swing today because we have slow-motion pictures to analyze it for us. But modern ingenuity has given the player of today tools that are far more accurate and precise than those used 50 years ago. Whenever human perfection is approached in the game, it is matched by an approach to mechanical perfection, an accurate, tough, far-flying ball and powerful, properly balanced clubs. And there is no reason to believe that the golf equipment of the next 50 years will not be even better.

The tennis racket has kept pace with the increased speed and tempo and severity of the game. It had to do so. Compare the modern streamlined, taut, tournament racket of today, strung to a musical note, with the square-headed clumsy bat that was used in the nineteen-hundreds.

And it is well known that the important balance of power between pitcher and batter in baseball lies not in the hands of the players, but with those who are charged with the specifications for the inner construction and manufacture of the ball used. When the public is in the mood for hitting, the lively ball appears, and doubles, triples and home runs rattle off the ends of the bats. When the fashion switches to tight pitching, a slight change in the centre of the ball and its manner of yarn winding, and those long flies that today clear the boundaries of the parks for home runs will settle gracefully into the hands of waiting outfielders for put-outs.

There isn't a single piece of sports equipment used in any game that has not been tremendously refined and improved in the last 30 years, nor a single item in which there is not room for further improvement.

And as long as human beings continue to make money out of sport, games and competitions of every kind will continue to advance technically; that is to say, form will improve as the mechanics of participation are studied and analyzed. There is a vast difference in attitude between people who do things for fun or relaxation and those who do them to eat. Any amateur who turns professional will tell you that he never really began to learn about his game until he took it up vocationally as a wage-earning profession.

Even the amateurs today are competing much more fiercely than they ever did before, on account of the kudos and the titles which in some manner or other can be turned to cash or benefit or advantage. And all top-rank amateurs have their professional coaches and teachers who profit directly out of the records and victories of their pupils; so again there is the incentive to study the mechanics of sport.

No small part of the modern standards of track and field sports and the general excellence of today's competition compared to that of 30 years ago is due to the greatly improved technique of running and jumping, all tending towards efficiency and the elimination of waste motion. But it would be merely thick-headed to hold that we know all there is to know about such technique.

A first-class football team of 30 years ago wouldn't stand a ghost of a show on the field today with a fast, deceptive, modern team such as one will find at Southern Methodist, Colgate, Stanford, Yale, or Minnesota. The 1937 team, with its reverse plays, hidden-ball tricks, fake attacks, deception, forward and lateral passes, and, above all, speed and mobility, would run the old-style teams ragged. And the team of today would probably be just as badly off with the teams of the future.

BIG MONEY PRESSURE

When football was merely a collegiate pastime, all hands were content to slog away with force and weight. When it became a huge money-making industry, with victory translated into bank-notes, teachers of the game began to study it and to make use of their brains. At the rate that it has been changing in the past ten years—even the shape of the football has been slightly altered to make it more adaptable to passing—50 years from now it would probably be unrecognizable to the spectator of today.

Judging from the ephemeral quality of the swimming records for both male and female, the technique of swimming is apparently still in swaddling-clothes. There was a lot of nonsense written after the 1932 Olympic Games about the Japanese secret of swimming that enabled 14-year-old schoolboys to carry off most of the Olympic prizes in competition against grown men and mature athletes. There was no secret except that the Japanese had learned the most correct and efficient style of swimming yet developed, the American crawl, and then had taken the trouble to teach it properly and to insist upon practice with Oriental patience and thoroughness.

But the technique of speed swimming is not yet completely developed, and few if any of the present-day records will be extant even ten years from now. Fifty years from today, when that generation reads about the time we used to make back in 1937, it will wonder whether we swam with weights tied to our ankles.

INEXORABLE TIME

But this is an uncertain world. Civilizations have risen and fallen before. Our records, printed on rag paper, are less lasting than those of the ancients who, if they kept them, inscribed them on parchment or chiselled them in marble. Not a scrap of these remains, and archaeologists digging down through the rubble that may cover the cities of today a thousand years hence, will find not one single piece of evidence that in 1934 the mile was run in 4:06.7 or the hundred in 9.4, or that later generations improved upon these startling figures. A great world catastrophe involving the destruction of nations and the wholesale slaughter of people such as have been periodic in history may throw the development of sport out of gear, to be resumed later, perhaps at levels never dreamed of today.

One is likely to forget that there was organized sport in Greece and Rome before Christ, track meets and games, and that with the fall of these nations there then was a hiatus of something like 18 centuries before national and international sports competitions were resumed. For all we know, the Greek athletics of the great Hellenic period may have run the equivalent of the hundred yards in nine seconds flat and made our modern milers look like selling platers. One might well fancy running brought to the state of a high art in an age when it might more often than not mean the difference between life and death.

One of the most important roles attendant on the Royal Visit on Friday was placed by the Scouting organization as some 2,000 Rovers, Scouts and Cubs participated in the welcome to Their Majesties. Some [illegible] of this number, including about 300 Cubs, were from points outside the city. Visiting Scouts came from points as distant as Dawson Creek and Marshal, Sask., to pay homage to their sovereign.

Approximately 1,000 Scouts assisted in lining the route of the procession along Portage avenue, while the remainder of the Scouts and the Cubs formed a colorful block in front of which were massed the representative colors of the various troops for the salute to Their Majesties as they passed.

ACT AS USHERS

The Scouts acted as ushers for several hours and then were gathered together at 2 p.m. and formed up to take over their positions along the route.

After the King and Queen had left Portage avenue, the Scouts blocked off the avenue to allow the Cubs to cross to the Scout camp by the Prince of Wales Armories in order that the youngsters would not become lost.

Connie O'Donovan, Don Budge Give Edmonton Bulletin Readers a Few Basic Tips on Their Favorite Game

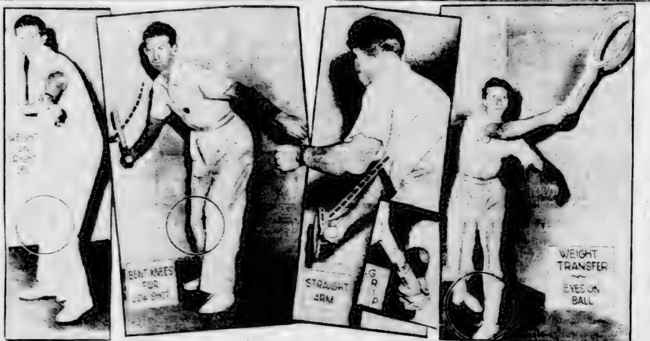
Finish . . . Connie set for return.



Thunk—Ping—Thunk—white clad figure flashing over red shale or grass courts straining desperately to get a little white ball across a net—laughs, spills and the jovial camaraderie that goes with any clean, wholesome sport. That's tennis. As a special feature for readers of The Edmonton Bulletin's Young People's page, we secured these action shots of Miss Constance O'Donovan, Detroit ladies' singles champion, and of J. Donald Budge, professional tennis champion of the world and the only player to hold the British, United States, French and Australian tennis crowns in the same year. They won't tell you how to do everything that's necessary to become a star at the game, but it illustrates some of the basic points, and the flaw that has been hindering improvement in your game may be shown. In the upper panel, the comely Detroit champion shows you how to grip the racquet for a backhand stroke, the position of the feet after a drive, the point of contact between ball and racquet for a spin with a serve on it, the follow through on a spin serve and the finish, after which she hustles back to the ready position for the return. Don Budge posed for these "how-to-do-it-properly" pictures the other day, so look closely. Actions speak louder than words, we've heard it said, so we won't say much about these pictures of the tall, freckle-faced Californian red-head. About all we can add is that time-worn adage that saves a player many an unexpected bump on the noggin—and does help his game—"keep your eye on the ball!"

Wednesday and Thursday at special hours, Vic students practised songs and cheers with which, Friday they welcomed Their Majesties to the city. Yesterday 500 Vicites formed a bloc between 103 and 104 streets and, after uniting their voices in "Little Sir Echo" and "Three Little Fishes," they really accounted for themselves as the Royal car passed.

At the Lits, Mr. Baker led students in a rehearsal of songs, Mr. C. Scarborough, guest speaker, dwelt on the subject "Royal [illegible]" [illegible] Bean, cheer leader, added [illegible] to the school yells.

Reward for their [illegible] during the year and for their fine presentation of "Pride and Prejudice" came to members of the Dramatics Club last Friday with their annual party. The party was in the form of a fancy dress ball and many colorful costumes were in evidence. Congratulations were extended to Miss Eva O. Howard for her loyal service to the club.

The Vic Students' Union has now got a constitution. Product of a year's work the constitution was adopted Wednesday and is to be printed.

The usual class routine was interrupted this week a great many times—for radio broadcasts when the entire school received their souvenir medallions and song sheets, and of course their seat tickets. Flags were also distributed to the students. On Friday the various school groups met at the school and then went over to their places on Portage avenue to watch what was, and probably will be, the greatest moment of excitement [illegible]

[illegible] given out Monday. The delay was due to the fact that several students on the Year Book staff were fortunate enough to get work, and so were forced to leave their share of work on the remaining executive.

By the way, don't forget the Commercial Grad dance on June 10. The Grad executive are working their hardest to assure everyone one of the never-to-be-forgotten times of their lives.

Snapshots Corner

By CAMFAN

A camera user often finds himself handicapped by the edge of his [illegible] just the wrong place. A simple remedy which can be used occasionally is to move back, trim the extra detail away and enlarge the remainder. Another and perhaps more interesting method is to "pan," that is, make a series of consecutive snaps which if laid on the table and matched up would overlap somewhat. These may be trimmed so that one continuous picture results.

It can be done, roughly, holding the camera in the hand but results are vastly improved if a suitable tripod and "pan-head" are used. The secret of success is to keep the camera absolutely level throughout the series and to allow plenty of overlap. A series of snaps showing the street you live on and your own residence will make an interesting example of this type of work.

BETTER SNAPSHOTS

[illegible] of the camera [illegible]

1. Make and Keep Records—

[illegible] keep it for your photo scrap book which will then become a mine of useful references. When you make a snap make a written record at the time in a small notebook. This can be carried in your camera case or pocket as you prefer. Entries should include at least these details.

Kind of film, where developed, date, subject, light strength (weather), shutter speed, stop number, result secured.

A record of this kind has many other values besides the actual information with respect to a given film. The trouble you must take at first soon becomes an automatic habit—a good one.

BEGINNERS' DEPARTMENT

Considering that lenses are in [illegible] how light and lenses behave is so [illegible] that for a few weeks this department will be devoted to that topic.

An ordinary piece of iron wire can be seen in daylight but not in a darkened room. If it is heated in a gas flame it gradually becomes "red hot," at which time it can be seen as readily in the dark as in the light. In this case, it is said to be "self luminous," whereas before it was non-self-luminous—that is, it was seen only by virtue of light falling on it from some other source.

Thus we have two types of visibility. In the latter case we are dealing with an "emitter" which broadcasts light in all directions in straight lines. If the object is small the shadows of objects between it and the nearest wall will probably be sharp and enlarged. To calculate shadow size and position draw two lines from a point and insert a cross-bar to resemble an "A." The point represents a small light source, the bar an object and a line drawn [illegible] how this works, using pencil drawings.

[illegible] get lost, strayed or stolen," an excellent precaution is to have written down the number stamped on the lens, the shutter and the camera back. There can then be no difficulty about identifying it. Other information relative to your model can be worked out and put in the same booklet. In this may be included:

Hyperfocal distances for each aperture, image sizes for various distances, field covered at any distance, limit of resolution at each distance, exposure table for films [illegible] filters and other accessories according to maker's catalogue, list of the best pictures made each month of the year and many other tables as you need them.

16-Year-Old Edmonton Youth Takes 60 Feet Royal Visit Pictures

TONY CASHMAN

No one in Canada will ever forget this year's royal visit, but if Ralph Loder, 16, of 10703 125 street, ever wants to brush up on his memories of the event he will have an excellent way of doing it. He has taken over 60 feet of motion picture film of various stages of the visit at four points in the province—Calgary, Cochrane, Banff and Edmonton. The camera has been a hobby with him for only four months, and most of his previous experience came from "shooting" his friends.

CLOSE-UP

A week ago Thursday he drove down to Calgary with his father and the next day he got two scenes of Their Majesties' tour of the southern city. One series was taken from a bleacher, but the other time he was [illegible] ten feet from the royal car.

Mr. Loder had [illegible] Calgary [illegible] Ralph drove to [illegible] the Rev. J. G. Brown, of [illegible]. At Cochrane, where the royal train slowed down almost to a stop, he got some fine shots of the big luxury special. They beat the train to Banff and Ralph was on the job, to cover Their Majesties' arrival at the resort.

QUEEN WAVED

The highlight of the southern trip came on Saturday, but he didn't have a chance to film it. They drove up to Lake Louise and on the return trip passed the Royal car, which was just going up. Ralph waved, and this salutation was smilingly returned by the Queen.

Friday, Ralph, with Mr. Loder as technical adviser, took color films of the day's proceedings. There were pictures of the King and Queen of course, but a good half of the film was scenes of the decorations, and interesting sidelights on the Edmonton visit.

Ralph sent them [illegible] and at present is [illegible] So [illegible] he is invited to their premiere showing.

Canadian Girl Guides Fill Important Role At Royal Visit Here

Trim uniforms of over 1200 Canadian Girl Guides, Brownies and Rangers were seen at different points along the Royal Progress, as these young people served as ushers, first aid helpers, informationists and general handy men around the 100 street, Whyte Avenue and Portage Avenue bleachers.

Under the direction of Mrs. E. C. Pardee, provincial Guide Commissioner and Mrs. P. S. Warren, divisional commissioner for South Edmonton plans for the day went off "without a hitch." Approximately 130 officials were in charge of the young people, about 500 of whom were from out of town, coming from places north of Red Deer.

FEW CALLERS

The Guides assisted the St. John's Ambulance Association and the Red Cross in their First Aid tents, and presided at their own First Aid station, where callers during the day were exceptionally few. Mrs. Pardee heard one Guide remark, "Are there no sick Guides in this town?"

North side Guides met at St. Joachim's Parish Hall while the South side groups were taken care of at St. Anthony's parish hall. Bleachers on 109 street, Portage avenue and Whyte avenue were spots where the Guides were stationed.

In speaking to a Bulletin reporter Friday evening, Mrs. Pardee said that the Queen, who was once a Guide Commissioner herself, endeared herself in the hearts of the Guides when she rode along Portage avenue with her parasol up and as she heard the girls cheering her, quickly lowered the parasol and gave the section an extra special bow.

NEW RITUAL IS ADOPTED BY HI-Y CLUB MEMBERS

A new and different set-up featured the Hi-Y meeting recently. Informality gave place to ceremony and ritual. The chairs, instead of being placed casually in the room, were arranged in the form of a triangle the triangle being the symbol of the Hi-Y organization. At the head of the triangle was the table occupied by the president while to the left and right, respectively, were the secretary's and treasurer's places. Two candles, burning at the head of the triangle, added materially to the atmosphere of reverence.

USHERED IN

Members were ushered to their places by the sergeant-at-arms, who opened the meeting by lighting, at the president's request, the two candles symbolizing friendship.

A summary of a chapter from Dale Carnegie's book, "How to Win Friends and Influence People," and the reading of a short essay, "Thoughts for Youth" were interesting insertions in the business session. The meeting was concluded by the members reciting the Hi-Y pledge.

MAY GET SWEATERS

Plans are under way for a Hi-Y sweater, which will be pure white with probable trimmings of red and blue.

The organization of a Hi-Y grad club for graduating members of the Hi-Y is being investigated by a special committee.

Parliament Not Likely To Hear Bren Gun Report

OTTAWA, June 3—A report of the Bren gun contract inquiry conducted by the commons public accounts committee is unlikely to be submitted to parliament, scheduled to be prorogued today.

As the committee adjourned Friday, Conservative and C.C.F. members rejected a suggestion from G. G. McGeer (Lib., Vancouver-Burrard) that separate reports, majority and minority, if necessary, should be submitted in regard to the charges made against General L. R. LaFleche, deputy minister of defence, by Col. George Drew, Ontario Conservative leader.

WINDSOR, Ont., June 3. — Upwards of 1,000,000 people, including United States visitors from Detroit, it is expected will be in Windsor Tuesday night to greet the King and Queen. There is grandstand accommodation for 100,000 persons, built mostly by industrial firms for their employees and families. Their Majesties are scheduled to spend only 15 minutes here.

Spring is the time for BUILDING and REMODELING

Easy Ways To Defeat Bugs

To garden economically is to take precautionary methods of eliminating bugs and diseases and to know what is wrong with a plant when it becomes sickly and to apply the proper remedy.

Every gardener must take pests as a part of the game. If plants are growing under the conditions that they like and are given proper nourishment, good root drainage and water where there is a drought, they are less likely to become the prey of bugs and diseases that befall plants trying to grow in adverse conditions.

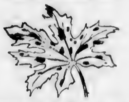
Rust on Hollyhock leaf.



Black spot on Delphinium leaf.

Some gardeners run for the spray gun every time something is wrong with a plant. Many pests are apparent to the observing gardener. When the practical gardener finds a large green tomato worm he picks it off the stems or leaves and stamps on it. When rose bugs appear he carries a little can of kerosene and shakes the bugs off the stems into the container. Many pests can be eliminated without costly sprays by manual labor. Maybe it isn't pleasant work, but it is economical gardening.

There are some pests that have to be given a poison. First look at the plant's leaves and follow the suggestions given here in pictures for the remedy.

One safe way to eliminate certain diseases such as the yellows in asters is to destroy by burning the entire plant so as to prevent the spreading of the disease to other aster plants.

Aphids are the gardener's worst pest. These small lice-like insects suck the sap from leaves. They are visible to the naked eye and come in all colors, usually on the underside of leaves and shrubs, trees, and flower plants. Poisons do not affect them. Spray with a non-poisonous spray of pyrethrum compound.

MAPLE POPPED CORN BALLS

Four quarts popped corn, two cups sugar, two cups maple syrup, one-eighth teaspoon salt, one teaspoon vinegar, two tablespoons butter. Pop corn. Remove any unpopped kernels. Measure sugar, syrup, salt and vinegar into a saucepan. Heat slowly to boiling, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Boil to the hardball stage, 275 degrees. Add butter, pour over corn, tossing the corn lightly while adding syrup in order to cover it well. When cool enough to handle shape into balls.

Water House Plants Often

By DEAN HALLIDAY
Central Press Garden Expert

House plants require watering nearly every day during the summer months to keep them from drying out. Even better treatment of house plants is to give them a summer vacation by setting them out in the garden.

Fig. 1 of this Garden-Graph illustrates the fact that you do not need to remove a plant from its container. Sink pot and plant into the soil as illustrated. The pot should be set in the ground up to the soil level within it, which is usually to the bottom of the pot's rim. Place a layer of cinders below the pot to prevent worms or insects gaining entrance through the drainage hole in the bottom of the pot.

Summer vacation for house plants

While most house plants should be planted in light shade when set out in the garden, Stapelias and Aloe should be placed in full sun. If this is done they will continue to bloom throughout the summer.

Suggestions for HOME-REMODELING

"Exceptionally Livable" is the term you'd apply to this California house, with its low roof over the porch for protection from sun's rays. Interior arrangement is ingenious and compact to afford you many extra comforts.

Notice the conveniently located bath and extra lavatory; the ample terrace space; the large rooms! And you can build it for well under $6,000.

Bath-Room Comfort First Consideration Of Modern Home

When one enjoys the comfort of the bathroom of a modern home with its gleaming fittings and towels and mats matching the colored tile borders, it is rather surprising to reflect that bathroom consciousness is comparatively new to the modern world.

In the early Roman civilization the comfort of bathing was highly esteemed. This high regard for the bath disappeared in the Dark Ages along with the rest of ancient culture, but, unlike art, was apparently one feature that was missed in the Renaissance and continued in the discard through further centuries.

It is really only in the last fifty years or so, says the Institute, that people generally have regarded a bathroom as an essential feature of a house and the idea is still not universal. The notion that a bathroom should be comfortable and attractive is a still more recent development. Plenty of people can remember having no better facility than a galvanized iron tub on Saturday nights, laboriously filled by mobilizing all the kettles, pots and pans on the kitchen stove to heat the water.

A bath in every home became the necessity, but, until the last few years, they were not very inspiring in appearance. Improvement in this respect was a natural sequence but probably was hastened by the introduction of the shower, which caused people to make more frequent use of the bathroom and to consider better appearance. Manufacturers of plumbing equipment have responded by the employment of artist designers and modern methods of production to produce fixtures of outstanding beauty, convenience and durability at prices within the reach of the most modest home.

* No better illustration of what modern business, in its organization, can do in co-operating to further the interests of those other industries dependent on it, is to be had than that of the Agricultural Implement Industry in its relation to farming.

Its inception was the making available to other farmers the tools which one ingenious farmer developed to lighten his own labors and enable him to accomplish more in the always too short seasons. Its support by farmers to the point which has enabled the building of organizations financially and technically strong enough to carry on large scale experimental engineering has increased its efficiency and usefulness to the benefit of every farmer.

Ever alert to the immediate problems of the farmer, whether it be soil-drifting, which it enabled the farmer to combat by producing and perfecting the One-Way Disc Seeder, or the need for still lower costs of production which it helps to solve as in the case of the adapting of the low cost harvesting combine to the needs of all farmers, both large and small, by developing the New Small Power-Take-Off Combines, its experimental departments are even now busily engaged in laboratory and field work anticipating the ever-new demands which farming continues to make on those whose life work it is.

Early associations with the pioneer farmer brought realization of his need for financial assistance and no source has been as liberal and none less costly than the implement maker in providing the necessary equipment to enable the farmer to reap full benefit from his land and efforts.

The urge for greatest volume to keep manufacturing costs down has ever dictated as low a selling price as was consistent with good business principles and prices of farm implements in Canada are cheaper than on any other continent in the world outside North America. Canadian prices compare most favorably with those in United States where the benefit of the world's greatest implement market is accorded the industry.

Massey-Harris regards highly its reputation for co-operating with the farmers of Canada and the co-operation it receives from the support and good-will of farmers generally.

Two Chiefs Have Talk

—By Bulletin Staff Photographer.

YARD MAN HAS WATCHFUL EYE FOR ROYALTY

Chief Constable A. Canning Heads Famous Police Force

Strong, silent man on the Royal train crossing Canada, upon whose shoulders the safety and well-being of Their Majesties rests, is Chief Constable A. Canning, of Scotland Yard.

Travelling part of the time on the pilot train and some of the time on the Royal train, he is with Their Majesties as they alight to the station platform and is always in a prominent place in the Royal processions.

ALGER STORY

Reading almost like a Horatio Alger story, the life of Chief Constable Canning is the tale of a boy who worked his way up the hard way, from a private detective 30 years ago to head the largest and certainly the best known police force in the world. He has held his present position for the past 12 years.

During his service to his country, he has travelled with the late King George V and Queen Mary and the Duke of Windsor, his duties taking him to all parts of the world. He has been with Their Majesties constantly since they left their home in England, and is accompanied by about half-a-dozen picked men from his force.

Although he has been to eastern Canada before this present trip, this is the first time he has visited the west.

"Your country is beautiful," he told a Bulletin reporter, "and the Rocky Mountains particularly fascinated me. They are somewhat like the mountains I have seen in Europe but much more picturesque. You have a little Switzerland there."

SECRET SERVICE

Chief Constable Canning's work is mainly in the secret service department, although his reminiscences on the work of Scotland Yard are as thrilling as they are varied.

He spoke of the reception which Edmontonians tendered the Royal couple as one of the finest in Canada, mentioning that the two long miles of cheering thousands on Portage avenue was one of the things that will stand out in his memories of the tour.

"The flag waving and that solid mass of loyal people cheering as the procession went by was wonderful," he declared.

He left Edmonton at 9:30 aboard the pilot train, other members of which were the press, photographers, radio and newsreel men and a car of Mounted Policemen.

ROYAL TRAIN ENGINEER HAS LONG SERVICE

George Caldwell, 10177 115 street, the engineer who was at the throttle of the C.N.R. engine 6047 which brought the Royal Train into Edmonton, has had 37 years service with the company without an accident or demerit mark, officials declared.

As the Royal train reached the eastern entrance to Jasper National Park, it halted to allow Their Majesties to disembark, after which they proceeded along the right of way of the Canadian National Railways, their walk occupying 35 minutes. The train followed until Their Majesties signified their intentions of embarking.

Thirty minutes behind the schedule, Caldwell stepped up the powerful locomotive to the fastest speed at which Their Majesties have yet travelled in Canada, C.N.R. officials stated.

Last meeting before the summer recess of the Canadian Corps Association will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday next. Discussion will take place as to the events the association will participate in during the summer. The annual picnic of the organization and other matters are on the agenda for discussion.

DOGS

by P. Hamilton Goodsell

A DOBERMAN GOES TO THE TOP

ARTICLE NO. 162

As the climax of the recently held sixty-third annual show of the Westminster Kennel Club a Doberman Pinscher, only ten days off the boat from his native Germany, was adjudged best of all breeds represented by over three thousand dogs. In the long history of the club this is the first time that a dog of German breeding or a Doberman has ever achieved that honor. In fact, only twice before has a member of the Working Dog Group ever accomplished this feat, an Old English Sheepdog and a Collie.

The elation of all Doberman owners is understandable and natural, but if they are banking on any large and sustained increase of interest in the breed I fear they are doomed to disappointment. I do not mean to infer that the Doberman is not a fine breed in every respect, or that it is not a handsome, aristocratic-looking dog possessed of great spirit and intelligence, but it is one which takes a lot of understanding and sometimes by its actions creates the impression—however wrong such may be—that it is vicious and untrustworthy. Certainly the actions of this particular individual while in the show ring, in refusing to let the judge lay a hand on him, were not conducive to an increased liking for the breed on the part of many spectators who perhaps failed to consider the fact that the dog was new and strange to all his surroundings and had not yet found himself in his new environment.

It is my belief that it never does any breed any lasting good to show a specimen that does not possess at least safe ring manners. Inability or failure of a judge to handle all the dogs in the ring must always give rise to a certain amount of adverse criticism, and unfortunately this occasion is proving no exception. In judging I have never put up a dog of any breed on which I could not lay my hand, and I never will.

If one desires a watchdog that will act as the best burglar alarm known and yet will not keep one constantly on defense against suits for damages, one should get one of the Toy breeds. They are usually more alert than their larger cousins, and their size enables them to give warning while safe under cover.

Mr. Goodsell will be glad to answer letters about dogs, exclusive of those dealing with sicknesses, if you will write him at Tenacre, White Plains, New York. Enclose a self-addressed, stamped (3-cent) envelope.

LIVESTOCK REPORT

By Senior Markets Supervisor

| Receipts: | Cattle | Calves | Hogs | Sheep |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Week | 830 | 830 | 724 | 66 |
| Saturday | 47 | 259 | 96 | 35 |

Trading was not so brisk as last week, due to lower price trends on outside markets, and the weather clearing resulting in more direct receipts. Prices declined fully 25c per cwt. for the week. The sharp decline which was expected did not materialize here when the quota to the United States was filled. Receipts have been moderately light and consequently prices remained reasonably steady. Good lightweight butcher cattle sold readily with choice light steers bringing up to $675. Heavy steers slow movers, tops $6, heifers $6 to $6¼, cows were fairly steady with good lightweights bringing up to $4¾, with odd tops $5, heavy cows $4 to $4¼. Fed calves were off 25c per cwt. with tops at $6¾. Grass cattle are selling at fully 50c to $1 per cwt. below grain feds. The following are the quotations on grain fed cattle:

Good to choice fed calves $6¼ to $6¾, good to choice steers $6 to $6½, fair to medium $5 to $5¾, common to fair $3¾ to $4¾, good to choice heifers $5½ to $6, fair to medium $5 to $5½, common to fair $3¾ to $4¾, good to choice cows $4 to $4½, odd tops $5, common to fair $3 to $4. Canners and cutters $2¾ down, bulls $2¾ to $3¾.

Stockers and feeders in good demand at steady prices. The bulk of the better kinds selling at $4 to $4¾.

Calves continue steady with choice light vealers bringing $6½ to $7, plain and in-between kinds $4½ to $6.

The hog market declined 15c per cwt. from last week's close. The high for the week was $8¼ for bacons, but closed at $8.10 off-truck. The long hauled PePace Rivers sold Monday at $8¼, fed and watered, selects bringing a premium of 80c per cwt. and butchers discounted $1 per cwt.

Sheep and lamb market inactive. Insufficient receipts to establish a market. A few spring lambs selling from $10 to $10½, feed lot lambs $8, yearlings $4½ down and ewes $3 down.

AT CHICAGO

Alberta's Welcome To Their Majesties

This beautifully made address of welcome was read and presented to Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth on the steps of the Legislative buildings on Friday. Hand-written on specially selected birch bark, it is considered by experts to be the most beautiful presented to Their Majesties in Canada.

By ELIZABETH COATESWORTH JAMES

"Othello, The Moor Of Venice"

By WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

Iago is called the blackest villain in all literature.

As this play of Shakespeare opens, Iago talks with Roderigo on the streets of Venice. Iago swears that even now Othello is married to Desdemona, the lovely lady who has rejected Roderigo for a husband. Roderigo is furious that a Moor should have won a lady that found him unsuitable. Feeding this hatred with choice morsels of suggestion, Iago confesses that he hates Othello himself, for he resents the Moor's promotion in military positions over his own head. He is subordinate to the Moor, and lately was put on Othello's staff. Iago swears that he will be revenged.

The villain first begins to stir up trouble by going to the palace of Desdemona's father and apprising him of the news that his daughter has fled and married the Moor. That Venetian gentleman became inflamed with rage and set out to get Othello. Already Iago has found a possible plan for vengeance.

But runners have brought news to Venice of the approaching Turks. Even now in the middle of night the council is meeting, having just voted full military command to Othello. A summons from the council to come at once has just reached the Moor.

As Othello approaches the council meeting, he is confronted by Desdemona's father. Othello sends for Desdemona to come there and tell her father herself why she married the Moor. That lady came and stood courageously before the assembled notables, telling them of her admiration and respect for Othello, of his gentleness with her, and of her love for him. Her father had no further protest to make. When she learned that Othello was now commander-in-chief of the Venetian forces, she begged to go with him, but the council refused her plea.

Meanwhile Iago had been busy playing each person involved in his scheme against the other, being false to everyone. He persuaded Roderigo that Desdemona would never find Othello attractive for long, that soon she would seek a lover. Iago told Roderigo to embroil Othello's best friend, Cassio, in a street fight, no matter by what means. Then Iago persuaded his own wife, Emilie, to borrow the wedding handkerchief which Othello had given Desdemona.

Meanwhile Desdemona grieves because her husband is so hard on his former friend and she plans to show him wherein he can be lenient and just at the same time. When she speaks charitably of Cassio, her husband strikes her.

In the outer room there is a noise and outcry. Cassio has been brought here, senators and noblemen are without. Emilie runs into the room and sees the body of her mistress.

Emilie turns upon Othello. She cries out that Iago stole the handkrchif taninetaoinshrdlucmrfdleeece Othello jealous. She weeps and tells how Iago worked on Cassio to make him plead with Desdemona, and then made Othello believe that Cassio sought Desdemona's company for his pleasure. Emilie told the whole story which she now understood; she cried out that it was Iago's anger and jealousy at being held as a subordinate to Othello that made him seek this revenge.

The Moor questioned the dying Emilie had said, going further Cassio. He confirmed all that the falsities of Iago. Cassio and Othello wept upon each other as the former died. Othello turned away from his friend and looked upon his wife. He said, "I kissed thee e'er I killed thee" and fell upon his sword.

The senators and soldiers seized Iago and took him to the torture. Emilie wept over her beloved Desdemona, whose death she had unwittingly helped to hasten.

KIDNAP THUGS STRIKE TWICE IN 24 HOURS

Two Gun-Totting Youths Assault and Rob Taxi-Drivers

Striking for the second time within 24 hours, two youthful gun-toting badmen held up Ivan Cleven, city taxi-driver, at the point of a revolver shortly after midnight Friday, robbed him of about $15, and then left him bound in a vacant lot near the old Penn mine.

Early Friday morning Stanley Ashcroft, also a taxi-driver, reported to police that he had been forced to drive to a lonely road south of the city and had been left bound and gagged after the robbers fled with the $14 he had in his pockets at the time.

Police are convinced that both assaults are the work of the same two men. They point out that the tactics of the robbers were the same in each case. They accosted a taxi-driver, asked to be driven to a stated address, then forced the driver to take them elsewhere, and then, intimidating him with a gun, robbed him and left him bound when they fled.

The thugs are both described as being about 20 years of age, slightly built, of less than medium height, with dark hair. Police are pressing their investigations. They pointed out to newsmen that armed robbery is an exceptionally serious offense, especially where the person robbed is subjected to violence such as being tied up.

TORONTO CREW GOES OVERSEAS

Living Longer

EDINBURGH, June 3—Scotland's death rate and infant mortality rate in 1938 were the lowest on record. The figures were 12.6 per 1,000 and 70 per 1,000 respectively.

Tribe Pow-Wows to Entertain Royalty

—By Bulletin Staff Photographer.

9-YEAR-OLD IS PRESENTED TO ROYAL COUPLE

Premier's Grand-Daughter Is Honored During Visit Here

Happiest child in Edmonton on Friday was Beverly Kaye MacNutt, 9, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles MacNutt of Vancouver and grand-daughter of Premier William and Mrs. Aberhart. She had been selected to present the bouquet to Queen Elizabeth, but a change was found necessary and the little Alberta-born girl suffered a disappointment. But not for long. She was presented to Her Majesty and was granted a brief audience with her. And for her good fortune she has to thank Premier W. L. Mackenzie King.

When Their Majesties were leaving the reception given by His Honor Lieut.-Gov. J. C. Bowen and Mrs. Bowen, Premier King suggested that Beverly Kaye and Premier Aberhart's two daughters, Mrs. MacNutt and Mrs. J. Martin Cooper, be presented.

The presentation was made by Premier Aberhart. His two daughters were presented first and then came Beverly Kaye's turn.

SHAKES HANDS

Her Majesty looked down on the little girl and smiled that smile that has won the hearts of every Canadian. She shook hands with Beverly Kaye and took her to one side for a talk.

"How old are you?" asked the Queen.

"I am nine, Your Majesty," replied Beverly Kaye.

"Oh, you are just a little older and I think just a little taller than my younger daughter," said the Queen.

PRIVATE CHAT

They chatted for a moment or two and the Queen moved on.

So, while Beverly Kaye missed her chance to present the flowers, she had a private chat with the Queen and the Queen won the unfaltering devotion of yet another member of the younger generation.

"She was just lovely," said Beverly Kaye afterwards. "I have never seen anyone so lovely and I shall always remember her sweet smile."

King, Queen Visit Indian Encampment: Crees Sing Anthem

Twelve hundred Cree Indians from the Winterburn Reserve stood Friday and sang 'God Save the King" in their native tongue, then broke into wild cheers as Their Majesties stepped from the royal car and mingled with the Indians for several minutes outside the redmen's encampment at the corner of Portage avenue and 101 street. The Cree demonstration was one of the most interesting features of the entire 6½ hours the King and Queen spent in Edmonton.

The Indian encampment was the first stop made by the royal party after the royal procession got under way. Their Majesties were greeted by George Laight, Indian agent at Winterburn, and Col. A. G. L. Lewis, V.D., as they left their car. They stepped on to a buffalo robe, where they were introduced to Chief Joe Samson and Chief F. Ermineskin, two principal chiefs of the Hobbema tribe.

For several moments Their Majesties talked with Chief Samson who, 38 years ago in Calgary, read an address of welcome to the late King George V and the present Queen Mother Mary, then the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York.

PRESENTATION

Six-year-old Rosie Samson, daughter of Chief Joe Samson, presented Their Majesties with a gun case containing a pipe of friendship and a belt and tobacco pouch. The King received the gun case, while Queen Elizabeth accepted the other two presents. It marked one of the rare occasions on the current tour of Canada when Their Majesties have accepted presents from their subjects.

Rosie, a round-faced youngster with an infectious grin, immediately took the fancy of the Queen, who stooped down to talk to her. The shy little Cree child was so excited about the whole thing she couldn't tell reporters later what the Queen had said to her.

The gun case, belt and pouch were all made from white buckskin, heavily beaded.

CROWDS BREAK THROUGH

As the King and Queen stepped from the royal car the huge crowds broke through police lines in an effort to get closer to Their Majesties. Prompt action by police officials and a few ex-servicemen quickly placed them behind rope barriers.

Four colorfully decorated teepees and about 30 Indians in full buckskin regalia roused the interest of the King and Queen. George Bull, 90-year-old Hobbema medicine-man, and Frank Saddleback, a youth, performed the partridge dance in the cleared front of the encampment just before the arrival of Their Majesties.

War-whoops raised when Their Majesties passed the encampment the first time, before turning into the bleacher-lined Portage avenue, aroused the interest of the King and Queen, who made their stop on the return trip. Except for the Queen putting her foot to the curb when shaking hands with the Indian chiefs, neither of the royal couple stepped from the buffalo robe.

The war-whoops that greeted the King and Queen as the royal car passed the encampment the first time were nothing compared with those that rose as Their Majesties drew to a halt, descended from the car to meet the chiefs and accept the presents from the little Indian maid and then continued on their way.

TOM-TOMS

Throbbing tom-toms and the chanting of old tribal songs and war cries added to the colorful spectacle from out of the old west.

Rosie Samson was dressed in a lovely white buckskin outfit that was colorfully beaded. The shy little girl, almost overcome with excitement and the honor being bestowed on her, had to be called forward by her father to make the presentation to Their Majesties.

Pay ma che. Oke mow
Key cho-key mow
Me yet, sa coo toe waw win
May you may wat, tak
Kinways, toe Kim ma me yak
Ta a, Pay ma che.

FEW ACCIDENTS ON VISIT DAY: FIRST AID GIVEN

Despite the tremendous number of automobiles in the city Friday and the fact that many of these were operated by drivers inexperienced with city traffic, and especially with the exceptionally heavy traffic which marked down-town streets during the Royal Visit, there were no serious accidents, and only eight minor smashes reported to city police. There were no injuries, the only damage being a few bent fenders.

City hospitals had an unusually easy day as far as emergency cases were concerned. There were no serious accident cases, although each hospital reported about half-a-dozen cases requiring first aid attention.

The 100,000 visitors who invaded Edmonton for the visit of Their Majesties apparently reached their homes without any serious mishaps. Royal Canadian Mounted Police headquarters here reported Saturday morning that they had not received any reports of any incidents or mishaps of any consequence.

Poison To Oxen

NABOOMSPRUIT, South Africa, June 3—Arsenical salt, thrown on rocky soil to poison locusts, was eaten by oxen here, and 15 died.

N.Y. MAYOR IS TOLD TO CURB FAIR NUDITY

NEW YORK, June 3.—The delicate problem of controlling nudity in the New York World's Fair girl shows was handed over to Mayor Fiorello Laguardia Friday by Sheriff Maurice Fitzgerald of Queen's county.

Fitzgerald broke up a "Miss Nude" contest in the fair's amusement zone Wednesday night and arrested two entrants. In a letter to Laguardia, he demanded that the city take over the licensing of all World's Fair shows and impose a censorship ban on those showing too much of the feminine form.

Describing the "Miss Nude" contest as a "pure and simple nakedness display which I could not tolerate," Sheriff Fitzgerald said: "The girls just stood there and undressed." Grover Whalen, the fair's president, denounced the "so-called beauty contest" as a "cheap publicity stunt" but defended the regular shows, several of which feature show girls bare from thighs to head.

Vancouver Royal Visit Committee Is Under Fire

NORTH VANCOUVER, B.C., June 3.—The North Vancouver Board of Trade executive meeting went on record as "deploring" the inadequacy of arrangements made for citizens to view the King and Queen on their visit here.

The resolution, copies of which will be sent to Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Hon. Ian Mackenzie, minister of national defence, and the Vancouver central royal reception committee, added that those responsible should be censured.

The resolution was apparently in protest against a change in the royal route for the North Shore districts of North and West Vancouver in which six miles of the proposed route was deleted 24 hours before arrival of Their Majesties.

Russia Census

MOSCOW, June 3. — The Soviet government announced Friday that its 1939 census showed Russia had a population of 170,467,186. The total represented an increase of 15.9 per cent. over the Soviet Union's 1926 population.

Anglo-Turkish Pact

By DR. H. L. STEWART

Professor of Philosophy, Dalhousie University, and Editor of Dalhousie Review.

AN old Shakespearean tag tells us that many revenges are brought in by "the whirligig of time". But surely the whirligig of time brings more than revenges. It has not seldom brought also amendments, reconciliations, renewals of hope. In this better class we count what has just happened to make Great Britain and Turkey co-operate.

• • •

It is not the Turkey of Sultan Abdul Hamid that is to co-operate in a project of international justice; not the Power of 40 years ago whose duplicity abroad so long facilitated the horrors of its administration at home. That land of Armenian massacres, carried out at the behest of Moslem fanaticism, has given place to a reformed, an enlightened and a progressive modern state, in which the sanguinary fanatics of the past have had to recognize that their day is over. It is altogether natural that a Franco-British rather than an Italo-German alliance should be sought by the national leaders of that change.

He called into existence a state whose people had not merely learned the alphabet and the literary habits of the western world, but likewise had come to appreciate what is at stake in the western struggle of ideologies. Not that Mustapha Kemal was himself a leader of the parliamentary, democratic regime: his was still a dictatorship and no doubt necessarily so. He did not commit the mistake, observable in some countries elsewhere, of a premature imposition of democracy.

His successor sees quite clearly that the Axis Powers, if their joint enterprise is not stopped, will achieve such domination in the Near East as to make Turkey before long either their vassal or their victim. Ever since, in 1911, the province of Tripoli was wrested from Turkey by an aggressive war, and—under the new name "Libya"—was constituted an Italian possession, there has been no doubt in the minds of Turkish leaders as to the peril still further impending from Rome. It is well known that Asia Minor was an early subject of Mussolini's designs, and if the African adventure to which he was diverted should prove (as it seems already proving) a disappointment to him, he may turn to Asia Minor again.

By what means, then, before it is too late, can the resistance to Axis development be strengthened?

A hint, perhaps, was thrown out when a British loan of $80,000,000 to Turkey was made a year ago. The despatch recently of Von Papen as German ambassador to Angora was good news to London and to Paris, for Von Papen has a great record in diplomatic blundering (ever since he coined his famous term "the idiotic Yankees" in the early period of the war), and almost his first report from Angora must have been the report that "the enemy" had secured its desire.

What the pact means is this—that the Dardanelles are thrown open to British ships, that the Black Sea ports of Russia will be accessible if and when an Anglo-Russian entente follows, and that the whole strategic advantage which was sought so long in vain by force during the Great War will thus be placed freely at Franco-British disposal. All too vividly do the Nazi advisers realize what is the significance of this; how, for example, it has altered their whole prospect of exploiting for Axis purposes the oil resources of Rumania. Rumania's guarantors will have access to her in the hour of her need. For the first time the guarantee promises to become more than a guarantee on paper.
